Nation Gains New Power In Atomic Weapons

Truman and AEC Disclose Success Of Tests; Secrecy Still Held Vital

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

A tiny bit of the veil of secrecy that has shrouded recent atomic energy experiments was lifted for the American public yesterday by the Atomic Energy Commission and President Truman.

Both stated that the secret tests of new-type bombs at the proving grounds on Eniwetok Island early this year were highly successful.

Mr. Truman put it in the following language:

"Today we possess powerful atomic weapons.

"The recent tests conducted jointly by the Atomic Energy Commission and the armed services in the Pacific have demonstrated beyond any question that our position in the field of atomic weapons has been substantially improved.

"Such advances vindicate the faith of the American people in the principle of civilian control of atomic energy."

Fourth Semiannual Report

The revelations came in the fourth semiannual report of AEC to Congress, as provided by law. A White House release accompanied the report.

President Truman emphasized by repetition that he is determined to support civilian control of all nuclear operations.

He listed that as the first of four policy points, upon which he said the Atomic Energy Act stands:

1. "That since a free society places the civil authority above the military power, the control of atomic energy properly belongs in civilian hands."

2. "That until the technology of atomic energy is better understood and the safeguards are devised to reduce the hazards of its use, the normal role of private enterprise in the development of a natural resource must be restrained, and public ownership maintained."

Must Withhold Secrets

3. "That until controls are established on the international level to prevent the military use of atomic energy, we cannot, as a Nation, afford to disclose these secrets which make this new force the most deadly form of military weapon."

4. "That we must not relax our efforts to probe deeply into the facts of nature to derive increasing knowledge of atomic energy, both to supplement our defenses and to open new opportunities for peaceful progress."

Every effort to learn more about military progress with atomic energy than the brief bit in President Truman's statement proved useless. The five members of the commision and several of their leading scientists meeting with the Boy Flags Train With Undershirt To Prevent Crash

A youth, identified by Montgomery County police only as "Adams," was credited yesterday with averting a train-automobile crash at the Halpine crossing near Rockville.

Corpl. Kenneth Miller of the county police headquarters in Rockville said the car, operated by Mrs. Patricia Mathews of Spring Lake Park, stalled on the tracks when she attempted to turn sharply off the crossing.

While Mrs. Mathews went nearby to call police, the youth ran down the track waving his undershirt to stop an oncoming Baltimore and Ohio freight train. The train stopped several hundred feet from the car.

County police pushed the car from the tracks, but the youth left before officers obtained his full name.

Found by Maid at Estate

Mrs. Eleanor (Cissy) Patterson Dies at 63 of Heart Attack

Mrs. Eleanor Medill (Cissy) Patterson, 63, editor and publisher of the Washington Times-Herald, was found dead on her bed yesterday, victim of an acute heart seizure.

Death came to her at Dower House, her Prince Georges County, Md., country estate, apparently as suddenly as the news-shaking decisions she was wont to make.

She was found collapsed on the bed by her maid, Eva Borowik, and butler, Robert Lye, who went to the bedroom shortly after noon with a message from one of her editors. Her eyeglasses were on the pillow, a book under her face.

The bedroom lights were on, indicating she suffered the fatal seizure while reading in bed. On Friday, she had entertained neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Holloway, at dinner. When her guests departed at about 10:30 p. m., she retired to her room to read.

Dr. Bernard J. Walsh, 215 Kennedy dr., Chevy Chase, Md., her personal physician was summoned and pronounced her dead at 2:15 p. m. Dr. James I. Boyd, Prince Georges County medical examiner, issued a certificate of death due to natural causes, acute heart failure.

Fate of the Washington Times-Herald, which she owned independent of her other newspaper interests, was presumed to be contained in her will, undisclosed last night.

D. C. Pay Rise Held Hinging On New Taxes

17,000 Employes Look To Special Session Of Congress for Aid

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

Hopes of the District's 17,000 municipal employes for getting a pay raise out of the special session of Congress, which opens Monday, depend on the presentation of an alternative for the stymied sales tax.

An analysis of the District's legislative-fiscal situation made it evident yesterday that the once-filibustered sales tax is a "dead duck," and that some other means of raising revenue must be found to give a $330 a year pay hike to local government workers.

Already there are indications that the alternative revenue-raiser may be additional taxes on liquor, real estate, or both.

Action Held Likely

Capitol Hill observers agree that Congress is likely to take some positive action for increasing the flow of revenue into the local treasury. There are two compelling reasons for this action:

1. Already, in the first month of fiscal 1949, District officials foresee a fund shortage of over $1,500,000 by the end of the year if obligations are to be met.

2. District employes are seeking to share the high-cost-of-living raise granted Federal workers by the last Congress.

The sales tax, it was anticipated, would have raised enough money for the District to permit the pay boosts without strain. After hearings, discussion, and debate, the District Committees of both House and Senate okayed the sales tax, which called for a 2 per cent levy on retail sales plus an income tax on high salaries.

Senator Olin D. Johnston (D., S. C.), who successfully filibustered against the District's "little people," has let it be known he will filibuster again, if necessary, to block the sales tax.

More U. S. Aid Urged

The Senator wants Congress to increase the Federal contribution to the local budget—for services rendered—from $12,000,000 to $25,000,000. Legislative observers believe it is hardly probable that an economy-minded Congress would accept such a seemingly simple solution to the fiscal problem.

Of late, Senator Johnston has in-

Europe Fails To Coordinate, Hoffman Says

Recovery Chief Takes Nations to Task for Not Getting Together

Paris, July 24 (AP).—Paul G. Hoffman, European recovery program administrator, took Marshall Plan countries to task today for not yet showing "evidence of the coordination necessary for success" of the program.

Hoffman said he and W. Averell Harriman, his special representative in Europe, were encouraged by progress made thus far, but he added:

"Speaking for myself, I don't think we have yet seen evidence of the coordination necessary for success. The European nations still have a long way to go."

He announced the European organization had agreed only last night on a plan for mutual convertibility of European currencies, a step he termed essential to the desired expansion of intra-European trade. British delegates previously had been reported objecting to making the pound freely convertible with other currencies.

Questioned about Polish coal and Yugoslav timber, Hoffman said his administration wanted to promote "to the greatest possible extent" all East-West trade except for "contraband"—items considered military supplies.

"We want them to buy on the continent, whether or not it's behind the Iron Curtain," he said.

Hoffman also reassured the European nations that the program was a four-year proposition, no matter which side wins the November elections in the United States. He recalled that Governor Dewey, the Republican candidate for President, was one of the first to denounce projected House cuts in the program.

D. C. Man Weds Kurusu Daughter

Tokyo, Sunday, July 25 (AP).—Saburo Kurusu, Japan's eleventh-hour peace negotiator at the time of Pearl Harbor, now has two American sons-in-law.

Andre Marie Named Premier By Vote of French Assembly

Paris, July 24 (U.P.).—Andre Marie, hollow-cheeked veteran of the Nazi Buchenwald concentration camp, became premier of France today by a narrow vote of confidence from the National Assembly.

Marie's plan for a middle-of-the-road government built around a "brain trust" of elder statesmen was approved by a vote of 352 to 190 with 53 abstentions. He needed a minimum of 311 votes to proceed with formation of a cabinet.

The 50-year-old Radical Socialist lawyer succeeds Robert Schuman, whose government fell Monday when the Assembly adopted a reduced military budget over his opposition.

Marie promised a foreign policy of "firmness without provocation" which will guard French security "and our right to fair reparations."

As his first act, Marie named former premier Paul Reynaud and Rene Meyer, finance minister in the outgoing government, to represent France at a conference with ERP Adminis-

GOP Cool To Fight on Living Cost

Expected to Accept Truman Challenge For Action on Race Issue Measures

By the United Press

Republican congressional leaders were noticeably cool last night on the eve of the special session, toward Administration proposals to combat mounting costs of living.

The special session convenes Monday noon. President Truman will lay his legislative program before the lawmakers in a personal appearance at a joint meeting of the House and Senate at 12:30 p. m. (EDT) Tuesday.

The President is expected to propose price control of basic commodities, a meat-rationing program, consumer credit curbs and allocation of scarce industrial materials.

He also probably will request legislation on civil rights, a housing program, expansion of the recently enacted displaced persons law, a 65-million-dollar loan for permanent United Nations headquarters in New York and ratification of the world wheat agreement.

Details Not Worked Out

Paul A. Porter, former OPA administrator recalled to the Administration to defend Mr. Truman's anti-inflation program before Congress, said details of the meat-rationing program have not yet been worked out. He declined to disclose whether rationing would be asked at wholesale or retail.

Republican leaders of the GOP-controlled Congress have not yet decided what program they will follow in response to the proposals Mr. Truman will offer. But all signs pointed to early Republican acceptance of Mr. Truman's challenge for action on bills dealing with racial issues.

Southern Democratic Senators are ready to filibuster against the President's civil rights program. And Senate Republicans are just as ready to hit them with anti-lynching, anti-poll-tax and fair employment practices bills.

Expected to Widen Rift

The expected fight will almost inevitably widen the Democratic Party rift, which began as a Southern revolt against the President's stand on civil rights.

The Southerners meet Monday to plan their strategy for the special showdown battle.

But even Administration Democrats, who support the civil rights bills, were prepared to accuse the Republicans of playing politics if the GOP sidetracks price legislation to give priority to the Democratic family fight.

To which the Republicans can reply that no other bills are ready.

Truman to Review Air Force Planes At Field Opening

By the United Press

President Truman next Saturday will review an impressive sky parade of Air Force combat planes at the official opening of the International Air Exposition at the New York International Airport, at Idlewild.

This is the first such presidential review in the Nation's history. It may begin a yearly tradition.

Top brass of the military establishment and governmental and civilian notables including GOP presidential candidate Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, will be present.

13 Million Make $52 a Week

Prices Boosted 8 Per Cent On All General Motors Cars

By The Associated Press

The average weekly earnings of some 13 million factory workers reached a new high of $52.81 on June 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported yesterday.

Third-round wage increases in several major industries helped push production wages to a new peak. But prices were moving along too.

The Government statistical agency reported the shattering of all records in its cost of living index and in wholesale prices.

The advances in wholesale prices, already recorded by the bureau, made further increases in retail price levels almost inevitable unless consumer resistance proves an offsetting factor.

The cost of living index—now more accurately called the consumers' price index—hit 171.7 per cent of the 1935-39 average on June 15. The July figure won't be known until late August.

General Motors Corporation workers likely will get another hourly pay boost of two or more cents on the basis of the July index, under terms of their new contract. Wage increases are provided in the contract for whenever it is formally established that there has been an increase in the cost of living.

Meanwhile, General Motors raised the price of all its motor cars by eight per cent, attributing the action to "rising wages and material costs."

The new average weekly earnings for all factory workers reflected the wage hike of General Motors workers—but not of the soft and hard coal miners, steel workers, or Ford Motor Co. employes. They came after June 15.

A National Labor Relations Board examiner meanwhile recommended that the Boeing Airplane Co. of Seattle be required to bargain with a striking machinists union and that immediate reinstatement be offered striking workers. Some 14,500 employes of the company have been involved in a strike which began April 22, 1948.

The examiner, William E. Spencer, recommended that Boeing "cease and desist from refusing to bargain collectively" with Aeronautical Industrial District Lodge No. 751, of the International Association of Machinists, an independent union. Spencer also recommended that Boeing should cease any interference with the right of its employes to organize.

At Charleston, W. Va., settlement of a two-week strike at the E. I. duPont de Nemours Co.'s chemical plant at Belle was announced by Gov. Clarence W. Meadows.

Employes of the Univis Lens Co. of Dayton, Ohio—strike-bound since May 1—voted 302-272 to oust the CIO United Electrical Workers Union as their bargaining agent.

Immediately after the election, Univis President M. H. Stanley issued a back-to-work call for Monday. The union said it would continue the strike with an active picket line despite the election rebuff.

Dewey Urges Firm Front To Russia

GOP Will Forget 'Past Lapses,' He Says After Talk With Top Advisers

Pawling, N. Y., July 24 (U.P.). Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, Republican presidential candidate, tonight called for a firm bipartisan American foreign policy in dealing with Russia.

In a statement issued after a lengthy conference with top GOP foreign advisers, Dewey said the United States must defend its rights in Germany and at the same time seek every possible solution to the critical problem.

Dewey blamed the Berlin situation on the Democratic national administration, but said the Republican Party would forget "past lapses" in the interest of the country. It was the first Republican declaration on foreign policy since Dewey's nomination.

Eternally Competent

"Peace depends on being firm on essentials, conciliatory on nonessentials, and eternally competent in every detail," he said.

"Republicans have been trying to bring these qualities into the conduct of our affairs. The Berlin situation is critical largely because these elemental principles were fundamentally neglected."

"Our representatives at London, Yalta and Potsdam unfortunately relied upon assumptions rather than specific, intergovernmental agreements to define our rights in Berlin. But fortunately our rights have now become confirmed by usage, acquiescence and elemental reason."

Must Surmount Dangers

The Governor said the present duty of Americans is "not to be divided by past lapses but to unite to surmount present dangers."

"We shall not allow the domestic partisan irritations to divert us from this indispensable unity. In Berlin we must not surrender our rights under duress."

This statement of Republican policy was read to reporters by Dewey on the veranda of his white farm house. The statement followed preliminary conferences with Senator Arthur Vandenberg, GOP chairman of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, and John Foster Dulles, United States delegate to the United Nations.

Gambling Raid Nets Six Arrests In Montgomery

Montgomery County police arrested six persons on gambling charges last night following an 8:30 p. m. raid on a Cabin John, Md., home.

Detectives of the Bethesda substation said more than 1000 numbers slips and "hundreds" of unused pads of slips were found in the house. Also recovered was a quantity of illegal liquor, they said.

Frances L. Palmer, identified as the operator of the establishment, was charged with possession of gambling paraphernalia, possession of unlicensed liquor and selling whisky without a license. Bond was set at $2000 for a hearing on August 16 in Bethesda.

Five other persons, said to be patrons of the place, were charged with gambling. They were reported playing cards when the police entered.

U. S. Should Evacuate Berlin, Wallace Says In Acceptance Speech

Progressives Open Doors To Other Like-Minded Groups

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

Convention Hall, Philadelphia, Pa., July 24.—Under experienced left-wing guidance, the Progressive Party today adopted rules paving the way for affiliation of any other political group upon recommendation of the national committee.

The convention also determined to provide the Progressive Party with a national sounding board every year instead of every four years. The convention voted to come together annually instead of quadrennially as the major parties do. The publicity and propaganda opportunity is thus multiplied almost four times.

Slipping through unnoticed and without debate was the affiliation provision developed by the rules committee headed by Representative Vito Marcantonio (ALP-N. Y.)

Also adopted without debate were provisions allowing the big States of New York and California where Communists have their peak strength to dominate the national committee.

With a minor flurry of dissent, the convention also adopted a rule permitting the national committee of about 180 members to elect 40 more members at large to represent the "respective functional divisions of the party" such as youth groups, women's organizations, Negro and special nationality groups.

In addition the convention adopted a rules committee version of the two-thirds rule which cemented even tighter the control by the national committee.

Under the Progressives' version of the two-thirds rule the national committee can call a special convention at any time on 60 days' notice, but no business may be transacted except as the committee call provides unless two-thirds of the delegates vote otherwise.

The affiliation resolution offered by the rules committee and adopted here today reads as follows:

"The national committee shall give consideration to making provision in the rules of the party for affiliation to the party of membership organizations which support its program, principles and national candidates, and shall report its recommendations to the next convention."

Thus, for example, if the Civil Rights Congress, listed as a Communist front, passes a motion supporting Henry A. Wallace and Glen

West Experts Gather for Berlin Talks

Meeting in London To Resolve Views On Next Procedure

London, July 24 (AP).—American experts on Russian affairs from Washington, Berlin and Moscow converged on London today to discuss with western power partners a unified policy on the German crisis.

Their mission underscored the east-west differences over the Soviet blockade of Berlin, and lack of agreement among the western allies on how to proceed.

The American huddle here will bring together Charles E. Bohlen, State Department counselor and Russian expert; W. Bedell Smith, United States Ambassador to Moscow, and Lewis Douglas, Ambassador here.

They were expected to confer with British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin and French Ambassador Rene Massibli on the terms of a second western power protest against the Berlin blockade.

Bohlen was flying here in an Army plane with Gen. Lucius D. Clay, United States military governor in Germany, and Robert Murphy, Clay's political adviser. Clay and Murphy will discuss with Douglas the German situation, and the results of their conference with President Truman and Secretary of State Marshall.

(Clay and Bohlen landed at Berlin after their flight from Washington. They were to await the arrival of Ambassador Smith from Moscow before proceeding to London).

(The London correspondent of the New York Herald Tribune reported tonight that the United States, Britain and France were believed considering a United States proposal to appeal to Premier Stalin in the Berlin problem.)

Progressive Platform Hits Marshall Plan

Wallace's Party Also Asks for Negotiation With Soviet Russia

By a Post Reporter

Convention Hall, Philadelphia, July 24.—The Progressive Party's platform was made public here today as it was approved by the platform committee headed by Rexford G. Tugwell. Its acceptance by the convention Sunday can be taken for granted.

The program—a 22-page document—calls for:

Negotiation with the Soviet Union.

Repudiation of the Marshall Plan.

An end of the draft and rejection of universal military training.

Abandonment of military bases abroad which it said were designed to encircle or intimidate other countries.

Nationalization of the largest banks, railroads, merchant marine, electric power and gas industries, "and of industries dependent on Government funds."

Destruction of existing stockpiles of atomic bombs.

Speedy conclusion of a peace

Progressive Party Seeks Civil Rights Act

Convention Hall, Philadelphia, July 24.—One of the planks in the platform now before the Progressive Party convention reads:

"We call for a civil rights act for the District of Columbia to eliminate racial segregation and discrimination in the Nation's Capital."

Another one would guarantee the right of Government workers to strike.

Voters Flock to Polls

Stevenson Leads in Texas Race for Senate Nomination

Dallas, July 24 (AP).—Former Gov. Coke Stevenson held a lead for the United States senatorial nomination as returns in the State's first Democratic primary poured into the Texas Election Bureau tonight.

Representative Lyndon Johnson moved into second place over George Peddy, Houston attorney.

The bureau said early returns indicated a runoff would be necessary.

The bureau's 10:30 p. m. (CST) tabulation gave Stevenson 60,049 votes to 51,656 for Johnson and 36,329 for Peddy. Returns were from 117 of 254 counties, two complete.

Gov. Beauford Jester held a long lead in his race for renomination. He had 83,631 votes to 32,096 for Roger Q. Evans of Denison and 24,707 for Caso March.

The hard-fought senatorial race and clear weather brought more than a million votes in 6100 precincts of the State's 254 counties.

In the Senate campaign, Johnson campaigned in a helicopter and landed for 368 speeches; Peddy covered the State by auto and plane, emphasizing foreign policy; Stevenson relied on a handshaking tour, visited 200 of 254 counties and says he shook 200,000 hands.

Upward of 65,000 members of the U. S. Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines, many of them Texas property owners, are barred from voting today by ancient provisions of the State constitution.

House Minority Leader Sam Rayburn took a two-to-one lead in first returns tonight from the Fourth Congressional District.

Rayburn, who is campaigning for a nineteenth term in Congress, has 1662 votes to 694 for State Senator G. C. Morris of Greenville., and 291 for Judge David H. Brown of Sherman.

Representative Tom Pickett of Palestine was in a close race in the Seventh District with Nat Patton of Crockett, whom he beat for Congress in 1944. Representative Albert Thomas of Houston appeared assured of reelection in the Eighth District, where he received 10,748

Progressive Party Convention Told 'Get Tough' Policy Is Blocking Peace

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Shibe Park, Philadelphia, Pa., July 24.—Henry A. Wallace tonight accepted the presidential nomination of his custom-built Progressive Party with a call for United States military evacuation of Berlin.

Speaking from a tri-color dais on second base of this floodlighted ball park, Wallace told more than 23,000 third party fans Berlin will be the core of every world crisis until we come to an agreement with Russia.

He said we have "nothing to lose by giving up Berlin "in a search for peace."

The screaming crowd cheered Wallace and Mrs. Wallace for 15 minutes when they first appeared at the park.

Delegates tonight loudly cheered a march-on-Washington call by Representative Vito Marcantonio (ALP., N. Y.) to protest to President Truman and the Justice Department against the indictment of Communists." The "march" was set for August 5.

(A dozen Communist leaders were indicted earlier this week at New York on charges of advocating violent overthrow of the Government.)

Paul Robeson, Negro singer and actor, backed up the call for such a march to combat the "hysteria" he said the Administration is whipping up.

Howling delegates earlier had boisterously nominated Wallace and his running mate, Senator Glen Taylor of Idaho, at a nonstop session in Convention Hall.

Given Loud Ovation

Wallace was nominated unanimously, without so much as a roll call, at 4:40 p. m.. A speed-up was ordered so Wallace and Taylor could greet the delegates before their formal Shibe Park appearance.

Both briefly appeared at the hall after their nomination by acclamation. The delegates went wild.

The Taylors arrived first, the Senator carrying his 2-year-old son, Gregory, in his arms, and his other two sons, Arod, 13, and Jon, 6, were along.

Then Mr. and Mrs. Wallace arrived, with their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wallace. The demonstrators nearly tore down the house. The shrill applause continued for 15 minutes, while Wallace and Taylor linked arms, or posed for television with clasped hands held high above their heads.

Soldier Wounded By Alexandria Policeman in Fight

A Fort Belvoir soldier was wounded last night when shot by an Alexandria policeman while tussling with another policeman who was hurt.

The soldier, Pvt. Eugene B. Butts, was in critical condition in Alexandria Hospital with a bullet wound in the right side.

The tussle occurred, police said, when they attempted to disperse a crowd at Queen and Henry sts. after receiving a trouble call there.

Butts jumped from the cruiser he had been placed in and ran off with Police Pvt. Charles Barber at his heels. They tussled after the policeman caught him a short distance away and Barber's partner, Pvt. Wilmer Cator shot at the soldier. Barber was treated at Alexandria Hospital for head injuries and released.

Truman Plans Quick Vote Trip

President Truman plans a quick trip to Independence, Mo., to vote August 3 in the Missouri Democratic primary.

The White House yesterday said plans are incomplete, but Mr. Truman probably will make the trip by plane, leaving the Capital Monday, August 2. Press Secretary Charles Ross told reporters the trip would be a "quickie."

Text of Henry Wallace's Acceptance of Presidential Nomination

Candidate Invokes Roosevelt, Lincoln, LaGuardia, Norris

Shibe Park, Philadelphia, July 24 (AP).—Following is the text of Henry A. Wallace's speech accepting the Progressive Party presidential nomination:

FOUR YEARS and four days ago, as Vice President of the United States and head of the Iowa delegation to the Democratic convention, I rose to second the nomination of Franklin Roosevelt, and I said:

"The future belongs to those who go down the line unswervingly for the liberal principles of both political democracy and economic democracy regardless of race, color, or religion . . . Roosevelt can and will lead the United States, in cooperation with the rest of the world, toward that type of peace which will prevent World War III."

That was four years ago. Do you remember that summer of casualty lists, and the wreckage still smoldering on the beaches of Normandy? A time of dying, and destruction . . . and yet, something more.

For in that time, you remember, every one of us held a dream. At the lathe; in the fields in early morning, at the kitchen window, sweating out a barrage in the line, everyone of us dreamed of a time when the sound of peace would come back to the land, and there would be no more fear, and men would begin to build again.

And in that dark time, you remember, Franklin Roosevelt looked beyond the horizon and gave us a vision of peace, an economic bill of rights; the right to work, for every man willing. The right of every family to a decent home. The right to protection from the fears of old age and sickness. The right to a good education. All the rights which spell security for every man, woman and child, from the cradle to the grave.

It was the dream that all of us had, and Roosevelt put it into words, and we loved him for it.

Two years later the war was over, and Franklin Roosevelt was dead.

And what followed was the great betrayal.

Instead of the dream, we have inherited disillusion.

Instead of the promised years of harvest, the years of the locust are upon us.

In Hyde Park they buried our President—and in Washington they buried our dreams.

One day after Roosevelt died, Harry Truman entered the White House.

And 46 days later, Herbert Hoover was there.

It was a time of comings and goings.

Into the Government came the ghosts of the great depression, the banking house boys and the oil well diplomats.

In marched the generals—and out went the men who had built the TVA and the Grand Coulee, the men who had planned Social Security and built Federal Housing, the men who had dug the farmer out of the dust bowl, and the workman out of the sweatshop.

A time of comings and goings . . . the shadows of the past coming in fast—and the lights going out slowly—the exodus of the torchbearers of the New Deal.

I was still in the Cabinet—hoping that we might yet return, somehow, to the course Franklin Roosevelt had charted for the Nation in peace. And in that great hope, two years ago this month, I wrote to the President.

I WARNED HIM that we had fallen upon cynical counsel, that the bankers and the brokers and the big brass had launched us upon a dangerous policy—the "get tough policy."

I said then that "our postwar actions have not yet been adjusted to the lessons gained from experience of Allied cooperation during the war and the facts of the atomic age."

I said that it would be fruitless to seek solutions for specific problems without establishing an atmosphere of mutual trust and confidence—and I warned that our "get tough" policy would only produce a "get tougher" policy. That warning was before the crises in Greece, in Italy, in Palestine, in Czechoslovakia. That warning was two years ago—two years before Berlin.

You have read your papers. In the two years since the people who planned for living were eased out of Washington, and the ghosts who plan for destruction were invited in—in those two short years during which the Department of State has been subtly annexed to the Pentagon, and the hand of military has come to guide the pen of the diplomat—we have ricocheted from crisis to crisis.

The "get tough policy" has spawned its inevitable breed—the "get tougher policy."

And what harvest do we have of all our hoping, what fruits of the hard-won victory? Not peace, but the sword; not an economic bill of rights, but a mounting bill of wrongs.

Not life, but tens of thousands of deaths, on unnecessary battlefields in Greece, in Palestine, in China.

One world, yet, frozen in one fear.

FRED STOVER
Neighbor Nominates Wallace

The world's eyes today focus upon the burning spot of the cold war—Berlin.

Berlin need not have happened. Berlin did not happen. Berlin was caused.

When we were set on the road of the "get tough" policy, I warned that its end was inevitable. Berlin is becoming that end.

There is no reason why the peace of a world should hang on the actions of a handful of military men stationed in Germany!

In all earnestness, I assure you that if I were President, there would be no crisis in Berlin today. I assure you that without sacrificing a single American principle or public interest, we would have found agreement long before now with the Soviet Government, and with our other wartime allies.

Long before now we could have embarked upon a policy for Germany upon which a sound foundation could be built for peace throughout Europe.

It is not by accident that Germany has become, once again, the heart of a crisis.

Germany will be the core of every world crisis until we have come to an agreement with the Soviet Union. We have been maneuvered into a policy whose specific purpose has been this, and only this: To revive the power of the industrialists and cartelists who heiled Hitler and financed his Fascism, and who were the wellspring of his war chest.

In the western zone of Germany today, we are told, there is enjoyed "peace with justice."

This so-called just peace is not just. It is a peace which rebuilds the war-making potential of German industry in the western zone.

This justice is being dispensed by local judges, of whom 70 per cent are former Nazi officials. German war industry is on the rise again, and its managers are the same Krupp and I. G. Farben men who made Germany into Hitlerland.

There is no peace, no justice, for either Allies or former enemies in our German policy. It is a child born of lust for power and profit.

WITH a Germany groomed and muscled as the easternmost outpost of another war, we cannot make a peace, nor can the world which watches helplessly.

I repeat. If I were President, there would be no crisis in Berlin. Do you remember when—only two months ago—our Ambassador to Moscow sent a note to the Kremlin? It was a note which seemed to be an invitation to sit around the table of reason, an invitation to talk over the problems which have created this continued state of crisis? Do you remember how the Russians responded with what seemed like real eagerness? You remember that day.

It was as if somebody had suddenly declared peace. Sit down and talk it over, we said—that's the way. But what happened?

Within 24 hours, our Administration having consulted its carbon-copy opposite party, slammed the door it had itself swung open.

On that day, I addressed an open letter to Premier Stalin. I detailed a program which would have safeguarded the interests of both nations and preserved the peace. Ten days, later, when Stalin responded to that open letter, the "get tough" boys slammed the door again. Since that time, there have been no more approaches, except toward conflict. There are two sides to every curtain.

And so, Germany still festers at the heart of all peacemaking yet, by closing the door to peace talks with Russian leaders, nothing remains but the fruitless discussions of minor officials in Berlin.

I say the peace of the world is far too fragile to be shuttled back and forth through a narrow air corridor in freighter planes.

I say the lives of our children, and our children's parents, are far too precious to be left to the tempers of second lieutenants at road barriers where zone meets zone—or to the generals who are quoted calmly as favoring a "show of strength."

I say that if reasonable men, without special interests, peace-loving men—if Franklin Roosevelt were in Washington today—there would be no crisis in Berlin. Long before this, the leaders of both nations would have rooted out the causes for conflict.

We hear it said that we should have a showdown at Berlin. But what is the showdown about? What is the American public interests—some interests of Dillon, Read and International Bankers. But there is no public interest. Dillon, Read's distinguished alumni, Secretary Forrestal and General Draper and Dewey's Wall Street lawyer, John F. Dulles, are major advisers on this issue, but I have yet to meet the American in shop or field or college or independent business who wants to give up his life to defend Dillon, Read.

I think we should look coldly at some of the facts which confront us if the cold war developed into a hot war:

There is not a single nation on the European Continent prepared to put an army into the field to defend Anglo-Saxon, that is, British and American policies.

We can buy generals with dollars, but we can't buy wartime armies. These generals won't die in battle. Soldiers would. We can support, and we are supporting, armies during this time of cold war, but we can't purchase suicide. We can buy governments, but we can't buy people.

It is said that we must have a showdown or lose prestige. Truman may lose prestige. Dulles may lose prestige. But the American people won't lose prestige by demanding fundamental discussions looking to peace. Our prestige in Germany went sinking when we divided Germany and established the western sector as an American and British Puerto Rico—as a colony. When we did that we gave up Berlin politically, and we can't lose anything by giving it up miltarily in a search for peace.

We who are met here tonight, who are met here at a time of crisis, are talking to the people of the United States and the world on behalf of the everlasting principles of the founding fathers of our country.

We who are gathered here tonight recall the crisis of 150 years ago when Thomas Jefferson was attacked here in the City of Philadelphia, attacked because he spoke courageously for the peaceful settlement of alleged differences between the United States and France.

It was a time of terror unsurpassed till now

Thomas Jefferson was slandered as the tool of French revolutionaries bought with French gold.

One hundred and fifty years ago Thomas Jefferson took leadership in forming a new party, a successful new party which overcame the odds of a hostile press, of wealth and vested interests arrayed against it, and of a government which sought to undermine the new movement by jailing its leaders.

THE party Jefferson founded 150 years ago was buried here in Philadelphia last week. It could not survive the Pawleys, the Hagues, the Crumps, the racists, and bigots, the generals, the admirals, the Wall Street alumni. A party founded by a Jefferson died in the arms of a Truman.

But the spirit which animated that party in the days of Jefferson has been captured anew. It has been captured by those who have met here this weekend with a firm resolve to keep our tradition of freedom that we may fulfill the promises of an abundant, peaceful life for all men.

Four score and seven years ago, the successful candidate of another new party took office in Washington.

Lincoln, with the emancipation proclamation fulfilled the promise of the new party which he led to victory. He headed a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. In the generations which followed, his party became a party of the corporations, by the corporations, and for the corporations. The party of a Lincoln has been reduced to the party of a Dewey.

But we here tonight, we of the Progressive Party, we here dedicate ourselves to the complete fulfillment of Lincoln's promise; we consecrate ourselves to a second emancipation; an emancipation that will achieve for the Negro and all Americans of every race, creed, and national origin a full, free, and complete citizenship everywhere in these United States.

We ally ourselves against those who turn to nightmares the peoples' dreams of peace and equality.

We ally ourselves to stand against the kings of privilege who own the old parties—the corrupted parties, the parties whose founders rebelled in times past, even as we do today, against those whose private greed jeopardises the general welfare.

We stand against their cold war and their Red smear, under cover of which they steal our resources, strike terror into our hearts, and attempt to control our thoughts and dominate the life of man everywhere in the world.

We stand together to stop the disasters, economic, political, and military, which their policies must breed.

Only those who take the spirit of Jefferson and Lincoln and apply it to the present world situation can bring the peace and security which will end fear and unleash creative force beyond the power of man to imagine.

It was in the spirit of Jefferson and Lincoln that Roosevelt challenged the money-changers in his first inaugural address 15 years ago. It was in the spirit of Jefferson and Lincoln that he told the Wall Street crowd in 1940 that they had met their master. In the spirit of Jefferson and Lincoln he outlined the four freedoms and the economic bill of rights.

It was in the spirit of Jefferson and Lincoln that he addressed that great Senator, George Norris, and said: "I go along with you because it is my honest belief that you follow in their footsteps, radical like Jefferson, idealist like Lincoln, wild like Theodore Roosevelt, theorist like Wilson, dare to be all of these as you have in bygone years."

Franklin Roosevelt did not fear; he reveled in the names hurled by those who feared the shape of his vision. We of the new party, "the Progressive Party," shall cherish the adjectives and mound of hate thrown at us. They are a measure of the fear in the temples of the money-changers and the clubs of the military. The base metal of vituperation cannot withstand the attack of truth.

We of the Progressive Party must, and will, carry on where Roosevelt and Norris, and LaGuardia left off. They preserve for us all that was most precious, the old-fashioned Americanism that was built for us by Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt, and Woodrow Wilson.

There are some who say they agree with out objectives, but we are ahead of our times. But we are the land of pioneers and trail blazers. Though we have reached the end of the old trails to the West, a new wilderness rises before us—the wilderness of poverty and sickness and fear. Once again America has need of frontiersmen. A new frontier awaits us, no longer west to the Pacific, but forward across the wilderness of poverty, and sickness, and fear. We move, as the Pilgrim ships moved, as the Conestoga wagons moved, not ahead of our time, but in the very tide. And always before us, the bright star, the dream of the promised land, of what this Nation might be.

But the American dream is no Utopian vision. We do not plan rocket ships for weekend trips to Mars. The dream is the hard and simple truth of what can be done. In one fleet of heavy bombers lies wealth and skill that could have saved Vanport from the flood waters, that could have taken a million veterans out of trailer camps and chicken coops. We can build new schools to rescue our children from the firetraps where they now crowd two at a desk. We can end the murderous tyranny of sickness and disease. The dream is nothing but the facts. The facts are that we spend 20 billion dollars a year for cold war. The facts are that world health authorities, given one-tenth of this sum, could in one year with two billion dollars wipe from the face of the earth tuberculosis, typhoid, malaria and cholera!

THE cold war has already brought death to millions of Americans.

Look at your friends. Read the papers. Here are casualty lists. Millions, sick of cancer, tuberculosis, of Pellagra, of heart disease and polio. We can prevent and cure not only these diseases but a vast host of others by devoting our science as enthusiastically to peace as to war.

A nation that is shaped for life, not death, can save these lives—your lives, the lives of your families. Together we must rise up and write an end to the casualty lists of the cold war. This is the American way—to conquer the forces of nature, not our fellowmen.

Within the past month other men, candidates of the graveyard parties, have stood in this city have flexed their muscles, and have declared their intention to continue the cold war whose heaviest tolls have been taken here at home. Both have said that "partisan politics must stop at the water's edge." They have declared their agreement. It is an agreement which would doom the Nation and the world.

It is the policies which operate beyond the water's edge; the policies which demand heavy arms, and draft acts, and the waste of resources and skills in producing for disaster. It is those policies which determine the real wages for American workers, prices for American consumers, and the lifespan of all the people of the world.

Yes, other candidates have stood before the American people to declare that they have made no commitments to obtain their nominations. But they have committed themselves; they have committed themselves to the policies of the big brass and big gold; to the policies of militarization and imperialism; to the policies which cast a shroud over the life-giving, life-saving course Franklin Roosevelt had charted for this postwar world.

I tell you frankly that in obtaining the nomination of the Progressive Party, a nomination I accept with pride, I have made commitments. I have made them in every section of this land. I have made them in great halls and sports arenas, in huge open air meetings and in small gatherings. I have made commitments in the basement of a Negro church and in union halls and on picket lines. I have made commitments. I have made them freely. I shall abide by them. I repeat them with pride:

I am committed to the policy of placing human rights above property rights.

I am committed to using the power of our democracy to control rigorously and, wherever necessary, to remove from private to public hands, the power of huge corporate monopolies and international big business.

I am committed to peaceful negotiations with the Soviet government. I am committed to do everything I can through the new party to save the lives of those who are now to be drafted through the establishment of peace without sacrificing any American principle or public interest.

I am committed to appointing to positions in the Cabinet and Administration men whose training and private interests cannot conflict with their public responsibilities.

I am committed to building and strengthening the United Nations as an instrument which can peacefully resolve differences between nations.

I am committed to using the power and prestige of the United States to help the peoples of the world, not their exploiters and rulers; to help the suffering, frustrated people in the colonial areas of the world even as we help older civilizations which have felt the full destructive force of war.

I am committed to planning as carefully and thoroughly for production for peace as the militarists and bankers plan and plot for war. For many of today's 60 million jobs are cold war jobs, unstable jobs, suicide jobs. I am committed to making 60 million, and more, jobs of producing for peace—house-building jobs, school-building jobs, the jobs of building dams and power plants and highways and clincs.

I am committed to a program of progressive capitalism —a program which will protect from the tentacles of monopolists the initiative and creative and productive powers of truly independent enterprise.

I am committed to fighting, with everything I have, the ugly practice of stifling with Taft-Hartley injunctions and the power of government the free trade union organizations of our workers. I am committed to rooting out the causes of industrial conflict and antilabor practices; to returning us to the basic principles of the National Labor Relations Act, and to strengthening the democratic organizations which give our workers safeguards against economic and political injustice.

I am pledged to fight the murderers who block, impede and stifle legislation and appropriations which would eliminate segregation and provide health and education facilities to bridge the gap of 10 years' life expectancy between a Negro child and a white child born this day.

I am pledged to licking inflation by stopping the cold war, the ruthless profiteering of monopolies, and the waste of resources which could give us an abundance of the goods of peace.

I am committed to helping lift the heavy hand of fear from our elder citizens, whose minds and bodies have served to build this America and whose reward must be the economic security which will enable them to spend their days with the peace of mind that comes from work well done and appreciated. And I am committed to those programs—principally the program for peace, which will lift from our young people the dread of war and drafts and unemployment and which will replace these fears with hope born of security and the equal opportunity to develop fully their individual talents and careers.

I am committed—as I have been my whole life through—to advancing those programs for agriculture which will increase the productivity of our land and better the lives of our farmers and their families.

I am committed to stopping the creation of fear; to using all my powers to prevent the fear-makers from clogging the minds of the people with the "Red issue." The American people want and deserve fewer Red issues and more red meat. Millions know and millions more must see that it is not the Kremlin, not the Communists who have sent milk to 24c a quart and meat to $1.30 a pound; that it is the Red issue, not the Reds, who did this to us.

Yes, I am committed and I am confident the new party will commit itself to the principle of using our democratic process to the end that all men may enjoy the benefits made possible by modern science.

And I am committed and do renounce the support of those who practice hate and preach prejudice; of those who would limit the civil rights of others; of those who would restrict the use of the ballot; of those who advocate force and violence; and I am committed to accept and do accept the support of those who favor the program for peace I have outlined here; the support of all those who truly believe in democracy.

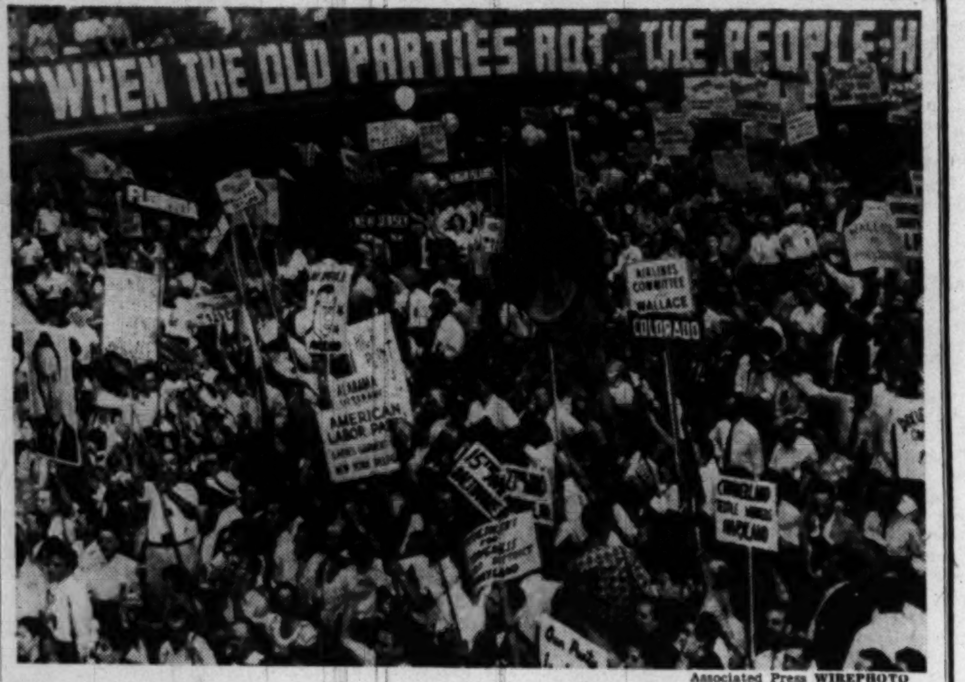
Wallace Asks U. S. to Quit Berlin



"WHEN THE OLD PARTIES ROT, THE PEOPLE-H

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

OVATION FOR WALLACE—Lifting banners and placards, cheering delegates jump to their feet to roar acclaim for Henry A. Wallace as his name is placed in nomination for President at the Progressive Party convention in Philadelphia. Nominations were completed yesterday

Progressive Party Candidate Blames U. S. for Situation

needling America's "get-tough-with-Russia" policy furiously renewed the attack tonight with a platform and party to back him up.

He charged the Berlin "war crisis" is the end result of two years of "get tough" and told the acceptance throng packed on the Philadelphia Athletics' ball field:

"Truman may lose prestige. Dulles may lose prestige. But the American people won't lose prestige by demanding fundamental discussions looking to peace.

"Our prestige in Germany went sinking when we divided Germany and established the western sector as an American and British Puerto Rico as a colony.

"When we did that we gave up Berlin politically and we can't lose anything by giving it up militarily in a search for peace." It was the same "Wallace or War" note that had been the theme of the new party's convention since it opened last night.

He hit at the same bipartisan foreign policy whipping boys the keynoter had lashed—National Defense Secretary Forrestal, Gen. William Draper, John Foster Dulles and the Dillon, Read banking house.

Ten Mentions of FDR

Ten times in his speech he mentioned the late Franklin D. Roosevelt and he charged a "great betrayal" followed his death.

"I assure you," he said, "that if I were President there would be no crisis in Berlin today . . . Without sacrificing a single American principle or public interest, we would have found agreement long before now with the Soviet government."

Denouncing the pledge of both major parties to end politics "at the water's edge," he said it is the policies which operate beyond the water's edge and "the waste of resources and skills in producing for disaster" that determine wages, prices and the life-span of the people.

Then Wallace announced 14 "commitments" he said he had made—commitments that telescoped in few words what his new party's platform will say in 6500.

Senator Taylor, in his acceptance speech, pointed up the same theme. Taking the stand at Shibe Park just ahead of Wallace, Taylor declared war or peace "the only issue."

Like Wallace, Taylor hit key men in the Government's defense and German occupation setup, the monopolies, the thrusts, big corporations and banks.

"The forces of greed have embarked America on a policy of preparing for a war of extinction," said Taylor. "It is life or death. It is peace or war."

Wallace was placed in nomination by Fred Stover of Hampton, Iowa, president of the Iowa Farmers Union and self-styled "farmer neighbor" of Wallace.

Stover told the coatless delegates in still-steaming Convention Hall that Wallace "will give the American people a chance to vote for peace."

Like all preceding speakers, and the nominee himself, Stover pictured Wallace as aiming his lance against "corporate imperialism" and what he termed military-supported "monopoly on a world scale."

Stover's speech was interrupted with hoarse cries of "We want Wallace" and banner-waving bedlam broke out as it closed. Forty-eight State emblems were borne around the hall, along with placards reading, "Bank or Hank," "Smash Mundt Bill," "Wallace and Peace on Earth." Bobbing portraits of Wallace and Taylor kept time while the band blared "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Iowa," and other tunes. It kept up for 30 minutes.

Eight three-minute seconding speeches followed. There was one by gray-haired, stocky Grant Oakes, president of United Farm Equipment and Machinery Workers of America (CIO), an avowed enemy of Walter Reuther, the anti-Communist head of CIO.

Many Figures Booed

Boos greeted every mention of prominent figures in both major parties. Singled out particularly for hissing and booing were President Truman, Governor Dewey, Attorney General Tom Clark, Harold E. Stassen, Senator Joseph H. Ball (R., Minn.), and his opponent for reelection, Mayor Hubert Humphreys.

Senator Taylor's name was placed in nomination by Lardin Marshall, Negro publisher of the Macon (Ga.) World and the first Georgia Negro to seek election to the United States Senate since Reconstruction days.

Marshall said he proposed Taylor because "we need bold men, resourceful men who can break through the conspiracies of silence in a thousand different ways."

He traced Taylor's exploits, from his singing cowboy campaign for the Senate, through his cross-country horseback dash to his 8½-hour speaking marathon in the Senate against the Taft-Hartley Law.

"He passes the hardest test of all," said Marshall. "He believes that all men are created equal."

Demonstration for Taylor

The same demonstration in miniature that had greeted presentation of Wallace's name broke on the floor. It lasted 8 minutes, subsiding only after a guitar-strumming rendition of "Idaho" and "Home on the Range."

Taylor's nomination, also by acclamation, came at 5:20 p. m.

Pledges 14 Points

In his Shibe Park acceptance, Wallace followed to the letter the new Progressive Party line. This line is that both the major party candidates speak for "big brass and big gold," that they are committed to "militarization and imperialism" and have deserted the course charted by Roosevelt.

Wallace said he had made his own commitments freely in speeches across the land, and pledged the convention he would abide by these fourteen:

1. To place human rights above property rights.

2. To control "rigorously" the power of huge corporate monopolies and international big business and "wherever necessary" place the power in public hands.

3. To conduct peaceful negotiations with the Soviet.

4. To name men to high Government posts "whose training and private interests cannot conflict with their public responsibilities.

5. To build and strengthen the United Nations to peacefully resolve differences between nations.

6. To use United States power and prestige "to help the peoples of the world, not their exploiters and rulers."

7. To provide 60 million and more jobs "producing for peace" in contrast to what he said are today's 60 million "cold war jobs."

8. To a program of "progressive capitalism" to protect from monopolists "the initiative and creative productive powers of truly independent enetrprise."

9. To fight "the ugly practice of stifling with Taft-Hartley injunctions and the power of Government the free trade union organizations of our workers.

10. To fight "the murderers" who block or stifle legislation and appropriations to eliminate segregation and provide health and education facilities to raise the life expectancy of Negro children to that of whites.

11. To lick inflation "by stopping the cold war."

12. To provide economic security for "our elder citizens" and lift from young people "the dread of war and drafts and unemployment."

13. To push an agriculture program to increase productivity of the soil and improve the lot of farm families.

14. To do all in his power to stop red-baiting: "The American people want and deserve fewer red issues and more red meat."

Concluding, Wallace promised to help spread the benefits of modern science to "all men."

He said he didn't want the support of those who "practice and preach prejudice . . . who would limit the civil rights of others . . . who would restrict the use of the ballot . . . who advocate force and violence," but added:

"I do accept the support of those who favor the program for peace I have outlined here; the support of all those who truly believe in democracy."

Senator Taylor directed his main fire at the Marshall Plan and the Economic Cooperation Administration which only a handful of his colleagues in Congress opposed.

He charged it is neither a plan to aid friendly nations to recover economically or a plan to feed hungry people.

"It is a cynical scheme to enable our cartelists and exploiters to filch billions of dollars from the pockets of American taxpayers for a scheme to corner world markets," he said.

"The idea is to use the taxpayers' money to send 'free samples all around the world."

The night acceptance spectacle was booked to start at 8 p. m., but the crowds were slow to fill the stands and the preliminaries were delayed 45 minutes.

To see the "Hank and Glen" show the crowd paid 65 cents for bleacher seats and $2.60 for grandstand tickets. The money will be used for campaign expenses.

Master of Ceremonies Sam Wanamaker, Broadway actor, kept the early show moving with songs, heavy chatter and a long string of preliminary speakers.

But the crowd never really cut loose and yelled until Paul Robeson's deep voice bore down on "This Is America to Me" and "Marching On With Henry Wallace." The crowd chanted the marching song with him or clapped and stamped in time with his voice.

Robeson, linked with many Communist front organizations, told the crowd a high standard of living is a "mockery" for all but a minority of Americans.

William Gailmor, former radio commentator, appealed for funds to buy radio time for the Wallace-Taylor ticket. He announced each contribution, mostly in $100 sums but three for $1000 each as they came to the stand.

Mrs. Lawrence Steefel of Minneapolis, co-chairman of National Women for Wallace, presented Taylor right after the fund-raising stunt. The crowd gave him a three-minute cheer, and cries of "We want Taylor." Taylor applauded the audience, saying, "I learned that from the Russians."

The new Progressive Party picked its convention officers this morning. For chairman, it was Albert J. Fitzgerald, president of the CIO United Electrical Workers Union.

For Fitzgerald, Delegates boiled out into the aisles in a yipping singing, banner-waving demonstration.

Unanimously elected permanent officers of the convention, along with Fitzgerald, were:

Vice chairmen, Mrs. Steefel and Alvin Jones, New Orleans; sergeant-at-arms, Gene Derrickson, Wilmington, Del., and secretary, Louis Adamic, Milford, N. J., author.

Guarantees of the right to strike for Government workers. And end to national defense "security orders" which "blacklist employes in private industries under Government contract."

An end to Jim Crowism.

A dollar an hour minimum wage.

Use of Federal "enforcement powers" to assure vote to Negroes in Southern primaries.

A halt to FBI investigations into "the political beliefs" of Americans.

A national system of health insurance "with freedom of choice to patient and practitioner."

Abolition of "social inequalities" between officers and enlisted men in the armed forces.

Direct election of the President and Vice President by popular vote.

Planned development of all resources for abundance for all.

A Federal emergency housing program to build four million homes within two years and 25 million new homes during the next 10 years.

Blistering Preamble

The platform committee which drew up the planks, including a blistering preamble attacking both the Democratic and Republican Parties, included such well known left-wingers as Louis Adamic, author; Harry Bridges, West Coast labor leader; Julius Emspak, Lillian Hellman, playwright; Grant Oakes, president of the Farm Equipment and Machinery Workers of America, CIO; Mrs. Paul Robeson and a score of others.

The new party's goals were set forth as "Peace, Freedom and Abundance."

On peace the specific plank was:

"The Progressive Party demands negotiation and discussion with the Soviet Union to find areas of agreement to win the peace."

On NATIONAL DEFENSE, additional planks called for:

1. Immediate cessation of armament expenditures "beyond reasonable peacetime requirements for national defense."

2. Repudiation of the Truman Doctrine and an end to military and economic intervention in support of reactionary and Fascist regimes in China, Greece, Turkey, the Middle East and Latin America.

3. Repeal of the provisions of the National Security Act which it said are mobilizing the Nation for war, preparing for a labor draft and organizing a monopoly-militarist dictatorship.

United Nations Planks

UNITED NATIONS:

1. Defense of the U. N. Charter and prevention "of its transformation into the diplomatic or military instrument of any one power or group of powers."

2. Establishment of a U. N. reconstruction and development fund to provide assistance to needy nations of Europe and Asia, without political conditions and with priorities to those people that suffered most from Axis aggression.

3. Continuous strengthening of the U. N. as a foundation for eventual federal world government.

4. A demand by the United States delegation at the United Nations for effective economic and diplomatic sanctions against Franco Spain.

DISARMAMENT:

1. A world agreement to outlaw the atomic bomb, bacteriological warfare, and all other instruments of mass destruction.

2. Establishent of U. N. controls, including inspection, over the production of atomic energy.

GERMANY AND JAPAN:

1. Speedy conclusion with "our wartime allies" of peace treaties with a unified Germany and with Japan.

2. A German settlement including denazification and democratization, punishment of war criminals, land reforms, decartelization, nationalization of heavy industry; Big Four control of the Ruhr; reparations to the victims of Nazi aggression, and definitive recognition of the Oder-Neisse line as the western boundary of Poland.

3. "Similar principles" for Japan.

STATE OF ISRAEL

De Jure recognition, admission of Israel to the United Nations, recognitions of the borders of Israel according to the U. N. partition plan, generous financial assistance to Israel without political conditions, recognition of the sovereignity of Israel in respect to immigration provision by U. S. Government for immediate shipment of Jewish DP's wishing to emigrate to Israel.

FAR EAST

1. Independeence for China, Indonesia, Indo-China, Malaya and other Asiatic lands.

2. Cessation of financial and military aid to the Chiang Kai-shek regime in China.

3. A coalition government for China and large-scale financial assistance to it.

4. An early joint withdrawal of occupation troops from Korea.

COLONIAL AND DEPENDENT PEOPLES

Unified homelands for such "traditionally oppressed and dispersed people" as the Irish, Armenians and Macedonians.

Abandonment of the Inter-American military program.

DISPLACED PERSONS

Repeal of the Displaced Persons Act of 1948 "which permits the entry into the United States of "Fascists and collaborators."

"We call for the enactment of legislation to open our doors in true American tradition to the victims of Fascist persecution."

"Freedom" Demands

FREEDOM

1. Condemnation of segregation and discrimination in all its forms and in all places.

2. Full equality for Negro people, Jewish people, Spanish-speaking Americans, Italian-Americans, Japanese-Americans and all other nationality groups.

3. A presidential proclamation ending segregation and all forms of discrimination in the armed services and Federal employment.

4. Antilynch, antidiscrimination, FEPC legislation and legislation abolishing segregation in interstate travel.

5. Antipoll tax law, universal suffrage for all citizens in Federal elections, and "full use of Federal enforcement powers to assure free exercise of the right of franchise."

6. End of segregation and discrimination in the Panama Canal Zone and all territories, possessions and trusteeship lands.

7. Full citizenship and voting rights for Indians.

8. Denial of Federal funds to any State or local authority which withholds opportunities or benefits because of race, creed, color, sex, or national origin.

9. A Federal program of education in cooperation with State, local and private agencies to combat racial and religious prejudice.

10. Legislation, to make it a Federal crime to disseminate anti-Semitic, anti-Negro and all racist propaganda by mail, radio, motion-picture or other means of communication.

RIGHT OF POLITICAL ASSOCIATION AND EXPRESION

1. The Progressive Party will fight for the constitutional rights of Communists and all other political groups to express their views as the first line of defense in the liberties of a democratic people.

2. Abolition of violence or intimidation, under the cover of law or otherwise, "including the violence and intimidation now being committed by those who are attempting to suppress political dissent."

3. An all-out fight against a Mundt-Nixon bill and all similar legislation designed to impose "thought control, restrict freedom of opinion, and establish a police state in America."

4 An end to the House Un-American Activities Committee and all similar State committees" and we mean to right the wrongs which these committees have perpetrated upon thousands of loyal Americans working for the realization of democratic ideals."

5. Elimination of the current "loyalty" purge program "and reestablishment of standards for Government service that respect the rights of Federal employes to freedom of association and opinion and to engage in political activity.

6. An end to present practice of congressional committees such as the House Labor Committee in "persecuting" trade unions and political leaders at the behest of "big business."

7. An end "to the present campaign of deportation against foreignborn trade unionists and political leaders."

NATIONALITY GROUPS:

1. Advocacy of the right of foreign-born "to obtain citizenship without discrimination" and repeal of discriminatory immigration laws based upon race, national origin or political beliefs."

2. Indemnity to Japanese-Americans for wartime losses and legislation facilitating the naturalization of Filipinos, Koreans, Japanese, Chinese and other national groups "now discriminated against by law."

3. Legislation facilitating naturalization of merchant seamen with a record of war service.

ABUNDANCE:

Price control and rationing.

Continuation of farm subsidies.

Elimination of excess profits and economic planning.

An end to discriminatory freight rates.

Federal control of tidelands.

Repeal of the Bulwinkle railroad rate law.

"Public control of patents and licensing provisions to insure the use of new inventions for the benefit of the people."

Rejection of the "eat less" policy.

A long-range program of full agricultural production, with "necessary safeguards for the security of farmers and for conservation of our natural resources." Adoption of the family-type farm, with an income of not less than $3000 a year for all farm families.

Price supports for farm products, and crop insurance.

International commodity agreements and a world food board to maintain stability in world markets.

A graduated land tax and support of farmer and consumer cooperatives.

LABOR:

Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and restatement of the principles of the Wagner and Norris La-Guardia Acts to prevent use of the injunction in labor cases.

Abolition of Government "strikebreaking" through seizure of struck industries under the pretext of Federal operation."

Stringent legislation to establish safety and health standards for miners, longshoremen, railroad workers, merchant seamen, etc.

The end of security checks on personnel in defense plants.

Social Security Proposals

SOCIAL SECURITY:

A cradle-to-the-grave Social Security program, with maternity benefits to mothers 13 weeks before and after birth of children.

Granting of children's allowances for families with children under 18.

"We look forward to the eventual transfer of the entire cost of the security and health program to the Government as an essential public service," the platform said.

The right to vote at the age of 18.

Fair labor standards for women, healthful working conditions and raising women "to first-class citizens."

TAXES:

Overhaul of tax structure "according to the democratic principle of ability to pay." "Effective" excess profits and undistributed profits taxes. Closing tax-dodging loopholes in the law. Opposition to all State and local sales taxes.

EDUCATION:

Guaranteeing, "free from segregation and discrimination, the inalienable right to a good education to every man, woman and child in America, essential to good education are the principles of academic freedom—in particular the principle of free inquiry into and discussion of controversial issues by teachers and students.

A system of free scholarships, fellowships and cost-of-living grants, free of discrimination.

A national program of adult education.

The party promised to support legal action by Negroes to obtain admission to State-supported colleges and universities. A department of education, arts and sciences with Cabinet ranks was advocated.

Establishment of a Federal program of fine arts "to make available the culture of the United States and the world to millions of Americans to whom it is presently denied."

VETERANS:

A bonus, and coverage of merchant seamen under all veterans' benefits.

Governmental enforcement of the right of Negro veterans in the South to file terminal leave applications and collect benefits.

Less Woman's Watch, Adding Machine Adds

Paterson, N. J., July 24 (AP).—Things add up better today at the office of Passaic County Sheriff William Dewey.

A new adding machine yesterday gave a total of 90 no matter what figures were tabulated. A repairman was called.

He fished out of the machine a woman's wrist watch in perfect condition. The sheriff wrote to the plant to see if a woman inspector was short one wrist watch.

States' Rights Party Will Try To Enter Ticket in All States

Atlanta, July 24 (AP).—The States' rights Democrats' steering committee today decided to try to enter a presidential ticket in all the States.

The action was announced in a formal statement released through George McNabb, press secretary to Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina. Thurmond was recommended at the Birmingham States' rights convention July 17 to carry the South's fight on civil rights against President Truman.

His running mate, selected at the Birmingham meeting, is Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi, the vice presidential candidate.

The committee's announcement said the decision to campaign in all States was to give "millions of real Americans the opportunity of voting for these candidates, and to present our American way of government according to our Federal and State constitutions."

"This is the most feasible way to preserve the real Jeffersonian Democratic Party in this country. We are dedicated to the preservation of States' rights in this country because this means preserving the individual rights and liberty of all the people."

Shortly after the announcement, Governor Thurmond said, "We are running for President and expect to be elected." He said he would make his first speech at Cherryville, S. C., July 31 at the watermelon festival.

The Governor also disclosed that the party's official title, adopted today, is "States' Rights Democrats."

He told reporters "We are not running on a white supremacy, racial-hatred or class prejudice platform. We are running primarily on the issue of States' rights."

Progressives Open Doors to Others

Taylor as candidates, and indorses the Progressive platform, the national committee can call a special convention to approve affiliation of the Civil Rights Congress with the Progressive Party. If that is set as a special order of business it will take a two-thirds vote to replace the committee recommendation with any other business. As the Progressive Party appears to be developing, that two-thirds vote will be nearly impossible to obtain.

Unique Plan Adopted

With the help of such skilled hands as Donald Henderson, John Abt and Reid Robinson and others on the rules committee, Marcantonio put through a unique plan to give his native New York a husky voice on the powerful national committee.

The regular political parties allow each State, territory or possession a national committeeman and committee woman. The Progressive Party, however, has this arrangement:

"In addition, the political party or organization of any State having 13 or more presidential electors shall be entitled to nominate one member of the National Committee for each five residential electors or major fraction thereof, in excess of ten presidential electors."

Thus, for example, New York, which has 47 presidential electors will have in addition to its two normal committee members seven others, making a total of nine. Pennsylvania will get seven, and California five.

When these totals are added to the 40 committee elected-special group representatives, the delegates from such States as little Vermont, for example, are more than likely to find themselves holding the very small end of the stick. It should not be forgotten that the heads of most "special groups" whom this national committee is likely to recognize have their headquarters in New York City.

Protests Smothered

A couple of delegates attempted to raise their voices against the provision allowing the national committee to increase itself by 40 picked members, but they were steamrollered by the well-disciplined majority following its leadership undeviatingly.

One delegate from Illinois pled for a more democratic method of electing these 40, but he was ruled out of order by Permanent Chairman Albert J. Fitzgerald, head of the left-wing United Electrical Radio and Machine Workers of America.

Urges People's March

Marcantonio received a wildly enthusiastic 15-minute demonstration when he introduced the rules with a rip-snorting speech celling for a "people's march on Washington" to demand "peace and civil rights."

His voice was frequently drowned out by a thunder of applause as he bitterly assailed the record of the Democratic Party on civil rights. Advocacy of civil rights by the Democratic Party, he said, was "a shame."

Marcantonio charged that House Minority Leader Sam Rayburn of Texas had promised residents of his district he would oppose such legislation. He said that in the very face of these pledges Rayburn had presided over the Democratic convention here two weeks ago when it adopted its civil rights stand after a bitter floor fight.

Hits "Controlled Press"

To the yelling, howling applause of delegates, Marcantonio slashed at what he called "the controlled press" for its "villification" of the Progressive Party movement.

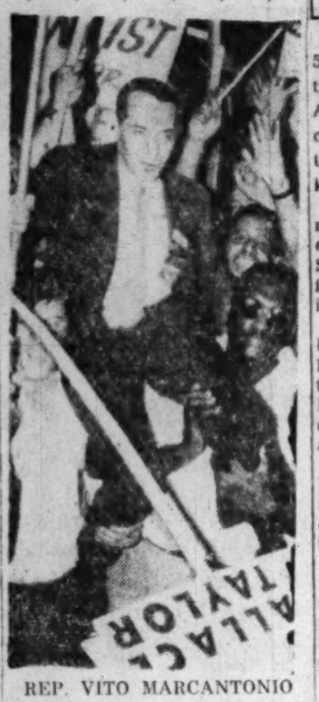
Fitzgerald today echoed the speeches of countless others in demanding cooperation with the Soviet Union.

A Progressive Party congress, he said, would "forge a real peace based on the give-and-take which Henry Wallace and Josef Stalin exchanged."

Other than the special provisions mentioned above, the Progressive Party adopted much the same rules as the regular political parties.

The rules committee's preamble, after setting forth the objective "to break the strangle hold of monopoly" said:

"We welcome to our ranks all Americans who share with us this objective and we declare that in the pursuance and accomplishment of this purpose there shall be no barriers to full and equal participation because of race, creed, color, sex or national origin."



REP. VITO MARCANTONIO is hoisted to the shoulders of cheering delegates to the Progressive Party convention and carried around the hall during demonstration for Henry Wallace

Convention Holds Roosevelt Memorial

Convention Hall, Philadelphia, July 24 (AP).—The Progressive Party convention held a memorial service today for Franklin D. Roosevelt and those who died in the armed services during the war.

Howard Penberg of New York City, former Marine Corps sergeant who saw battle action, led it.

A uniformed color guard, including one woman, presented the colors to the convention.

Millard Lampell of Paterson, N. J., former Air Force staff sergeant, told the delegates that there can be only one memorial to Roosevelt—"the memorial of a lasting peace."

"We say now to Franklin D. Roosevelt: 'We are here to fulfill your words—we are here to work,'" Lampell shouted. The delegates cheered.

"That tomorrow of sweet peace will be Franklin Roosevelt's memorial," Lampell added.

Delegates arose to stand silently a moment in tribute to Roosevelt. Offstage a bugler sounded "Taps."

Stevenson Takes Lead

votes to 4547 for State Representative Charles A. Murphy, jr.

Homer Thornberry, Austin City councilman, led a field of six in the Tenth District, which Lyndon Johnson vacated to run for the Senate. Incumbent Congressmen led in all districts where their renominations were contested.

In early election bureau returns Pickett had 2644 votes, Patton 2484 and Burke Summers 448. Thornberry's 4823 votes compared with 2326 for Creekmore Fath and 2082 for State Senator James A. Stanford.

Johnson Wins Top Place On Colorado Ballot

Denver, July 24 (AP).—Senator Ed C. Johnson won top place on the Colorado Democratic primary ballot today. The party's State assembly gave him 853 votes to 535 for his longtime antagonist, Gene Cervi.

Both Cervi and Johnson had enough votes to win places on the primary ballot, insuring a contest.

Johnson is seeking nomination for a third six-year term in the United States Senate. He is undefeated in a quarter-century of Colorado Democratic politics. Cervi, a former State chairman, challenged Johnson because the Senator has opposed several New Deal measures.

Selections Begin

Draft Boards Take Form This Week

With registration of an estimated 55,000 District men in the 18-through-25 age bracket to begin August 30, Selective Service officials this week will begin selection of draft board members and key personnel.

Most of the draft board personnel, according to Frank D. Norton, director of the Office of Selective Service Records, will be drawn from persons who operated them in wartime.

Peacetime Draft Director William E. Leahy plans to divide the District into five areas for administration of the draft registration. Each area will be headed by a coordinator and will include, at first, about two or three boards, he said.

The regional setup, according to Leahy, will facilitate registration and induction and enable rapid expansion of draft machinery "in the event of an emergency."

OSSR Director Norton estimated yesterday that 55 to 65 per cent of the 55,000 eligible District men probably will be exempt or deferred because of previous service or for other reasons.

Quotas for the draft will be based mainly on the 30,000 men expected to be taken into the Army over the U. S. monthly from October to July. District monthly quotas will not be known until possibly after registration ends September 18, Norton said.

Only men 19 years of age or older will be inducted under the Draft Act, although all men from 18 through 25 must register unless on active duty with the armed forces.

Meanwhile, all branches of the armed forces here reported yesterday that they had closed the doors, temporarily, to 1-year enlistments of 18-year-olds.

Off for Summer Training

2 Weeks Training

900 of D. C. Guard Leave For Camp

Nearly 900 D. C. National Guardsmen, largely members of the 260th Antiaircraft Artillery Group, were due to leave the District early today for two weeks' training at Camp Pendleton, Va.

The first unit, a heavy equipment truck convoy, was to leave the National Guard Armory, 2001 E. Capitol st., at 4 a. m. Other truck convoys were to depart from 6 to 7 a. m. on the 270-mile trip to the camp. Another group was to travel by train.

Besides the antiaircraft artillery battalions in the 260th AA group, other units present included the 104th Ordnance Maintenance Company, the 257th Army Band, the 370th Signal Radar Maintenance Unit and the headquarters detachment of the D. C. National Guard.

According to Col. Peyton G. Nevitt, Guard adjutant general, the Guardsmen will undergo prescribed field training at the two-week encampment. Firing of antiaircraft guns will be done in the second week.

On Saturday, July 31, the District of Columbia Air National Guard will begin its summer camp at Dover, Del. Over 400 officers and men will leave Andrews Field that day for a 15-day camp.

Washington units there will be the 113th Fighter Group headquarters, detachment "A" of the 213th Air Service Group, the 121st Fighter Squadron, 121st Weather Station, and 121st Utility Flight.

U. S. Scores Gains In Atom Weapons

press echoed Mr. Truman's statement, when he said:

"Secrecy is always distasteful to a free people.

"In scientific reesarch, it is a handicap to productivity.

Is Vital to Security

"But our need for security in an insecure world compels us, at the present time, to maintain a high order of secrecy in many of our atomic undertakings."

Mr. Truman added that ever since the first bomb was dropped on Japan he had sought means to lift the secrecy surrounding atomic research by eliminating atomic weapons as instruments of war.

"However," he said, "the uncompromising refusal of the Soviet Union to participate in a workable control system has thus far obstructed progress."

"When the nations of the world," he said at another point, "are prepared to join with us in the international control of atomic energy, this requirement of secrecy will disappear."

The commission's report indicated there were three bombs used at Eniwetok, in the spring project known as "Operation Sandstone."

Generation Studied

It referred to them as "new designs of weapons" and said the principal study was "on the generation of nuclear explosion itself," rather than as at Bikini "of the effects of the nuclear explosion."

"The experimental data gained at Eniwetok," AEC said, "is important to future research and development, both for weapons and for nonmilitary areas of knowledge and application."

Much of the report was given to atomic energy research in medicine, agriculture, metallurgy, other sciences and industry. Radioactive materials have been shipped to 229 institutions and commercial agencies for experimentation.

Four medical schools are using radioactive phosphorus (P-32) for therapy and diagnosis of blood disorders and abnormalities. Another 38 are using radioactive iodine (1-131) for thyroid studies.

Medicine Changes Predicted

Radioisotopes are already a significant medical weapon, particularly for combating cancer The commission predicted that "fundamental changes" in medicine are certain from such studies.

Dr. Nathan Woodruff of Oak Ridge, Tenn., assistant chief of the isotope division, declared that the "medical utilization of radioactive materials is encouraging." It is producing, he added, "many worthwhile results, the full benefits of which will not be immediately felt." He said those engaged in the studies are "extremely enthusiastic."

Similar enthusiasm is felt for the use of isotopes in industry and agriculture, although such investigations are held back because of the lack of personnel experienced in "the health physics" or the protection of workers from radiation.

Large-scale production of atomic power for industry cannot be expected for another 20 years, the commission warned. However, thought is being given to pilot plant experiments.

Greatest industrial use of isotopes has been in the rubber, steel and paper industries. Goodyear Rubber, for instance, is using them as a gauge to measure the thickness of soft film. Such film can be measured to an almost-perfect degree—within several thousandths of an inch—impossible with previous tools.

Isotopes have been sent by the commission to many foreign countries, but to none within the iron curtain.

In fact, it was brought out that no request for them has come from Russia, although it was indicated that such a request might be sympathetically received. There are no secrets in the isotopes of military value.

England has an atomic stockpile—the plant for developing atomic power—and another under construction, it was said. This country has sent isotopes to several of the members of the British Commonwealth: Australia, Canada and the Union of South Africa.

Other nations furnished them include Argentina, Belgium, Denmark, Italy, The Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Spain, Switzerland and Turkey. Cuba, France, Ireland and New Zealand are now negotiating for some.

Agricultural experiments are going on in 26 laboratories, with particular attention to "studies of growth." With the use of isotopes it may someday be possible to crack the mystery of photosynthesis—the process by which plants turn sunlight, water and air into food.

Might Solve "Hangover"

At the news conference Dr. James H. Jensen laughingly gave a "possible yes" to an inquiry if the studies into metabolism might someday solve a common hangover, or result in solutions of growth so that "maybe in 100 years, we will be 12 inches taller."

Chairman David E. Lilienthal declined to be drawn into any discussion of security regulations or what the commission knows of "atomic explorations" in Russia.

He did say, however, that the widely publicized uranium deposits in Czechoslovakia were "relatively minor," and that the loyalty investigations were "no help in recruiting scientists."

President Truman urged that "every thoughtful person should become familiar with the report."

"Atomic energy is not only the Government's business," he said, "it is the vital concern of every citizen."

To Issue Special Reports

The commission echoed these sentiments. It announced that it intends to issue special reports on developments from time to time in order "to increase the total area of public information" on the subject.

Lilienthal added that the commission felt that "a reexamination mission felt that "a reexamination formation to be made public than heretofore."

The potential benefit to the American people from increased information about and understanding of atomic progress would far outweigh "the possible marginal help" such information would give to "others."

Greek Strike Stops Mails

Athens, Greece, July 24 (U.P.).—The government today warned communications strikers that they may be drafted for military service unless their crippling, two-day-old walkout ends soon.

The strikers interrupted telephone, telegraph and rail service. Skeleton staffs are handling Greek government and military traffic, but United States Army mail was delayed.

Scotland Yard Winks At Helicopter Pub Stop

London, July 24 (U.P.).—Scotland Yard indorsed the air age today in the case of Alan Youell, London's first airborne pubcrawler.

Youell landed his private helicopter in front of a suburban bar at 6:45 p. m. yesterday, drank beer for half an hour and then took off.

Scotland Yard said the take-off and landing were entirely legal, and ruled that no police action was required.

D. C. Universities Try Isotope Experiments

Two universities in Washington are making experimental use of radioactive isotopes given them by the Atomic Energy Commission.

This is brought out in the Atomic Energy report made public yesterday. The schools are studying by means of radioactive tracers the structure and mechanics of living matter.

Georgetown University Medical School is using radioactive calcium in water and oil solutions to determine the effects of calcium on normal and malignant tissues.

At Howard University radiophosphorus and radiocobalt are used in metabolism experiments on animals.

Other uses of radioactive substances in Washington and nearby areas reported by the commission are:

Tracer micrography at the National Bureau of Standards.

Successful clinical treatment of patients with an excess of red blood cells at the University of Maryland in Baltimore.

Radioiron in growth studies and radiocalcium in bone and tooth formation at the Carnegie Institution in Washington.

Investigation of electro-chemical problems and a study of the effect of radioiodine on glandular disturbances at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore.

Tracing plant growth with radioisotopes at the Department of Agriculture Research Center, Beltsville.

Study of the problems of blood clots at Sinai Hospital, Baltimore.

Immunity studies using radioactive carbon, phosphorus and arsenic at U. S. Public Health Service, Bethesda.

Study of the action of anesthetics and of sleep producing drugs with the use of radioactive phosphorus at the University of Virginia, Charlottesville.

Study of states of shock of patients during operations by using radioactive sodium to determine red cell volume at the Medical College of Virginia, Richmond.

Testing of penicillin by combining it with radioactive sulphur at the National Institute of Health, Bethesda.

Plants' Output Is Allocated

By The Associated Press

The Munitions Board yesterday approved an agreement between the Navy and Air Force allocating production of five reopened war plants.

The plants are:

Naval Industrial Reserve Plant, Kansas City, to be operated by Westinghouse Electric Corp.

North shop of the former Wright aeronautical plant at Lockland, Ohio, now owned by the Electric Auto-Lite Co., to be operated by General Electric Co.

Walworth Co. plant (built under Navy contract), Washington Park, Ill., to be operated by Emerson Electric Co.

Boeing aircraft assembly plant, Wichita, Kans., to be operated by Boeing.

The Air Force said the Lockland plant would be utilized by General Electric for production of jet engines. The Walworth plant is to be transferred to the Air Force and operated by Emerson Electric for production of fire control systems for bombers.

The Wichita Boeing plant, held in standby condition by the Air Force since the end of the war, is being reactivated and will be used by Boeing for bomber modification and production.

The Navy said that Westinghouse would use the Kansas City, Mo., plant for manufacture of advanced design jet engines.

Soviets Accuse U.S. Of 'Recon' Flights

By Marguerite Higgins

Berlin, July 24 (NYHT).—The Soviets tonight, in a new protest on alleged American safety violations in the air corridor, strongly implied that American pilots were carrying out reconnaissance flights of Soviet zone industrial capacity.

Lieut. Gen. G. S. Lukianschenko, Soviet chief of staff, emphasized in a letter to the American chief of staff that "an American plane circled for about a half hour over the Rutland steel plant at Cottbus and on the same day an American twin-engine plane circled 15 times over the industrial Brenban plant in the Clau area at an altitude of 2100 feet."

An Air Force spokesman in Berlin rejected as ridiculous such suggestions by the Soviets.

The Soviets today gave omnibus warnings of Soviet fighter practice at more than five different points in the Allied airlanes.

A revealing crack appeared in the facade of Russian promises of plentiful food supplies for all Berlin today when the Red Army newspaper here, Taegliche Rundschau, admitted a flour shortage currently afflicts the Soviet sector. Local sabotage was blamed.

The admission of a food shortage did not hinder the Russians from continuing full-scale propaganda to bring the city completely under their control.

The Western Allies had some caustic words about the Russian offer to import 100,000 tons of grain for Berlin.

An official statement pointed out: "The Russians requisitioned approximately two million tons of food in 1946 and 1947, and a half-million tons of foodstuffs in this year." The statement pointed out that in the West no food was taken out and more than 11,369,277 tons of food were imported.

Total flights stayed at a high peak. The Americans touched down 279 flights carrying 1586 tons and British brought in 205 planeloads of coal and food. But new power cuts will be instituted here Monday to conserve fast-dwindling coal reserves, Germans probably will be limited to about two hours a day.

Western officials in Berlin prepared for the distribution starting Sunday of the newly printed Soviet Deutsche marks.

They are ready to permit the setting up of exchange centers in the western sectors and will accept the new marks for free circulation in the American, British and French sectors.

They were not conceding to a Soviet demand that the Russian currency be accepted as the only authorized tender for all Berlin.

[The Associated Press said the Americans and British are swiftly expanding air bases in western Germany. An Associated Press survey showed today that airdromes are being enlarged for huge bombers and jet-propelled fighters as well as swarms of airlift transports.]

2 Die as U. S. Plane Crashes in Berlin

Berlin (Sunday), July 25 (AP).—At least two persons were killed early today when a two-engine American C-47 transport plane carrying flour and other supplies over the Russian land blockade crashed into a street in the United States sector of the city.

The plane sheared off several trees and then hurtled into a bomb-damaged block of apartment houses. Two bodies were found. Apparently no residents of the apartments were injured.

Saturday a British twin-engined Dakota crash landed on take-off here. No one was injured.

U. S. Discusses New Red Move

—Bohlen, Smith and Douglas—is the same that helped decide United States policy in the deadlocked meeting of the Foreign Ministers' Council here last December.

American diplomatic officials here reported the meeting will bring a complete review of American relations with Russia.

The big question was how far will the United States go in meeting a Russian demand for new four-power talks on all-German questions?

France has demonstrated its willingness to discuss Germany's problems on a top level basis.

Britain, too, is ready to go into such a conference after—as Bevin told the Commons Friday—Russia ends its blockade of rail and road transportation to Berlin.

In the initial formal protest, it was the United States which took the lead in limiting proposed four-power talks to the question of Berlin alone.

There have been mounting indications of a change in this stand since Russia rejected the demand. Diplomatic sources reported the task of drafting a second protest to Moscow was turned over the Britain.

Flier Who Bombed U. N. Quarters Faces Mental Test

New Haven, Conn., July 24 (AP).—Stephen J. Supina, the former Army flier who "bombed" United Nations headquarters because he said he wanted world peace, was placed under $50,000 bonds today pending a mental examination.

Judge D. W. Celotto agreed to a continuance until Monday after Supina's lawyer, T. Emmet Clarie, said he wanted his client examined by a psychiatrist.

Said Clarie:

"It is obvious to any right thinking person that this man's act was not that of a normal human being. It might well be that his war service has so affected him that he may be in need of medical care."

Dean to Be Interviewed

Dr. Elmer Louis Kayser, dean of the university students division of George Washington University, will be interviewed by Earl Godwin on the subject, "Hope of Peace," over Station WMAL at 6:30 p. m. today.

Bludgeon Slayer Of Boy, 6, Hunted

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

FAULDES LANDRY, JR.

6-year-old favorite of the Spanish-French trapping and fishing hamlet of Violet, La., known as "Boo," was found slain late Friday night. Heavy blows had bashed in his head. A posse of 200 townfolk and police was disbanded after beating the swamps all night. A 15-year-old boy and his sister-in-law, 21, were being questioned yesterday

Foreign Policy Called Firecracker

Chicago, July 24 (UP).—The present foreign policy of the United States, if continued, will "go off like a giant firecracker in our faces," Robert M. Hutchins said today.

The chancellor of the University of Chicago said the only way to avoid war is to form a world government. "The cold war in which we are now engaged can lead to only one result—a shooting war," he said.

Writing in the August issue of Common Cause, Hutchins said that the airplane and modern means of communication have made the world one geographically and that it certainly will become one politically "by conquest or . . . through free choice of the people of the world."

A preventive war would not be the answer, he said.

Hutchins said that at present the official policy of the United States is "the domination of the world by America through a perpetual armament race which we are always winning. The Government feels that since Russia is our only rival, keeping Russia in her place is equivalent to American domination of the world," he said.

* THE OCCASION FOR THIS PHENOMENAL SALE IS THAT BALLARD . . . ONE OF AMERICA'S GREAT STORES, IS RETIRING FROM THE RETAIL BUSINESS

Here is a Sale, so sweeping in nature, so complete in selection, so drastic in value—it is destined to be the outstanding merchandising event of the past ten years. For years, the Ballard name has been one of the most important names in the music and home appliance field. A decision by Ballards to retire from the retail field and sell their entire retail inventory to Lubar—lock, stock and barrel—makes this event possible. Plans by Lubar call for an extensive remodeling program, prior to its own operation at the Ballard location. Hence, this Final Sale and Clearance of Ballard merchandise—one of the finest stocks in the city—merchandise that is nationally known and advertised—merchandise that represents the last word in quality and performance—all fully guaranteed by Lubar. Lubar has added some of its own fine stock to assure you of a greater selection.

Macedonian Issue Perils Balkan Peace

By Homer Bigart

Belgrade, July 24 (NYHT.).—The Macedonian problem loomed as the danger issue in the embittered Tito-Cominform rift today after Lieut. Gen. Svetozar Buckmanovitch, leader of the Macedonian partisans, accused Bulgarian Communists yesterday of attempts to detach Macedonia from Yugoslavia.

Speaking at the fifth congress of the Yugoslav Communist Party, General Bukmanovitch, known as "Tempo" during the partisan uprising, launched a scornful attack on Bulgarian Communists. He alleged they were not only cowardly in the wartime fight against the puppet government in Sofia, but even collaborated in the designs of the Filov regime for a greater Bulgaria at the expense of Yugoslavia.

Demands Special Status

[The Associated Press said demand for a "special status" for the people of a section of Macedonia in Bulgaria was made before the congress today. A Macedonian, Dita Vlahov, president of the National Praesidium, told the delegates his land always had been the seat of the fight "against Bulgarian imperialism."

[He said Pirin Macedonia, which is in Bulgaria, had made "innumerable sacrifices in the struggles against Bulgarian chauvinism and fascism," and should have a special status.]

Thus the Macedonian dispute, four times the cause of fratricidal war among the south Slavs, again threatens Balkan peace. The quarrel over Macedonia, which troubled Yugoslav-Bulgarian relations even during the rapprochement of the past three years, has been greatly exacerbated by the deepening split between Yugoslavia and the Cominform.

New Peak in Defiance

Yesterday was marked by speeches that reached new heights in defiance of the Cominform call for revolt against Marshal Tito. There was tumultuous cheering as Lieut. Gen. Bolzhider Maslarich, president of the world-wide All Slav Committee, appealed for support from the people of the Cominform countries over the heads of the Cominform leaders.

He said Communists in Poland and Czechoslovakia were stunned and bewildered by the Cominform's accusation and saw no reason for so violent an outburst. He called upon them to reject the Cominform and unite with Marshal Tito as the true interpreter of Marxism and Leninism.

National pride was inflamed when General Bukmanovitch told how the fighting qualities of Yugoslav partisans completely eclipsed those of Bulgarian Communists

The crowd rocked with scornful laughter when Bukmanovitch said that Bulgarian partisans were still hiding in underground bases four days after the Red army liberated Bulgaria.

"Bulgarians considered going to the woods a romantic adventure," he said, amidst derisive laughter.

Reports Skepticism

General Maslarich, who recently returned from Poland and Czechoslovakia, reported widespread skepticism there over the Cominform accusations against Yugoslavia.

Maslarich denied the Cominform charge that Yugoslavia was following an anti-Marxist policy with regard to peasants, particularly that no preparation was being made for collectivization of peasant holdings. He replied that collectivism was correct and necessary in the Soviet but that there was no need of it in Yugoslavia.

Marie Wins Initial Test

trator Paul Hoffman in Paris tomorrow.

Marie won his vote of confidence only after a day of heated debate and behind-the-scenes dickering which showed France's middle-of-the-road parties still dangerously divided on major issues. He planned to proceed immediately with the formation of a cabinet, which also must be submitted to the Assembly, but party differences are so sharp that several days of "horse trading" are in prospect before he can announce the complete cabinet list.

Communists Opposed Him

Marie was supported in the confidence vote by Popular Republicans, Socialists, Most Radical Socialists, part of the extreme Rightist Republican Liberty Party, and a few of the followers of Gen. Charles de Gaulle. All Communist deputies voted against him, as was expected.

In addition to a firm foreign policy which will stand by the London six-power agreement on the future of western Germany, Marie promised:

1. An inner cabinet of France's most respected elder statesmen.
2. Vigorous action to halt further rises in prices and wages.
3. Special government power to act in economic crisis.
4. A strong drive for increased industrial production.

In two speeches today, Marie pledged his government to stringent economic recovery measures, cuts in military expenses, full support of the Marshall Plan, and "reform" of France's nationalized industries and civil service.

65 Arrested In Hungarian Money Deals

Budapest, Hungary, July 24 (U.P.).—The government announced today that 65 persons have been arrested in a million dollar scandal involving sterile stallions and 15,000 copies of a book entitled "Love, Engagement and Marriage."

An official communique said the plot was engineered by "Fascist" followers of Adm. Nicolas Horthy in the Ministry of Agriculture, one of the few ministries controlled by the Smallholders and not the Communists.

The government said the plot included:

1. The purchase of 15,000 copies of "Love, Engagement and Marriage," published by the Catholic Action Society, with funds allotted for agricultural textbooks.

Say Stolen Library Bought

2. The purchase of an agricultural library from the man who stole the library from the Ministry of Agriculture.
3. Diversion of $99,000 set aside for fighting insects to equip a transport firm and buy machinery in Switzerland which never was used.

The communique said money earmarked for the purchase of stallions was used to buy automobiles, and that stallions already owned by the state were forced to eat cornstalks and reeds, and thus became sterile.

"The misuse of funds totaled nine million forints (about one million dollars) but damage to the country's agriculture is much more," the communique said.

Leaders In Plot Named

Among leaders of the alleged plot were Bela Perneczky, agriculture official, and Arthur Sibelka-Perleberg, Hungarian representative in the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization.

Hungarian economic police charged late today that Catholic relief organizations abroad have helped owners of nationalized plants take money out of Hungary illegally.

An investigation of alleged currency manipulations by the Catholic action society resulted in five arrests, it was said.

The police said factory owners gave money to Zsigmond Mihalovitz, society director, and got it back in francs or dollars in Switzerland. Mihalovitz and five priests were sentenced yesterday.

Czechs Claim Former Spy Spies on Them

Prague, July 24 (AP).—A former Czech espionage official, who allegedly returned here disguised as a British businessman, has been arrested on a charge of being a spy in foreign service, the Ministry of Interior said today.

The man was identified as Vladimir Knotek, former head of the intelligence bureau of the Czech National Socialist Party. The ministry said Knotek was attached to British secret service in London during the war.

He was said to have changed his appearance by wearing a wig and beard and using a rubber mouthpiece to alter the shape of his face.

The ministry said he confessed that his purpose in returning to Czechoslovakia was to prepare a spy ring and to set up communications with London by short-wave radio.

Many persons were questioned in connection with the case and "some of them have been arrested," the announcement said.

Cardenas, Cuban Politico, Is Shot By Two Gunmen

Havana, Cuba, July 24 (AP).—Antonion de Cardenas Fuertes, a minor government official who had been accused and absolved of three political shootings in recent years, was wounded last night in an attack by two gunmen.

Cardenas, 34, a department chief in the ministry of education, was a long-time friend of Rogelio Hernandez Vega, former assistant chief of the Cuban secret police, who was killed last week by gunmen who shot him 13 times in Mexico City.

Cardenas formerly was a member of the secret political society, Accion Revolucionaria Guiteras, whose organizer, Carlos Duque de Estrada, died last week under as yet unexplained circumstances.

Marshall Plan Hit in Burma

New York, July 24 (AP).—Edwin F. Stanton, United States Ambassador to Siam, said today Russia is trying to sabotage the Marshall Plan in Asia by "paralyzing the production of raw materials."

Interviewed as he arrived aboard the liner Brittannic, Stanton also said there is a "bad situation all through Burma and it may go completely Communist at any time."

"The Soviets, not content with attempting to sabotage the Marshall Plan in Europe, are making every effort in that direction in Asia, too," the Ambassador declared.

"It takes the form of assassination and terrorism, all directed against the rubber states, the idea being to paralyze the production of raw materials."

The Ambassador said Communists had "infiltrated nearly all the trade unions in Burma and Malaya, and, to some extent, in Siam, too."

Stanton will consult with the State Department and remain in this country about three months.

FBI Arrests 'Runaway' B-17's Pilot

New York, July 24 (AP).—Nine men who took a B-17 on a mystery flight, apparently headed for Palestine, returned from the Azores today. Their leader was immediately arrested by the FBI.

The man Irvin R. Schindler, 32, pilot of the plane, was quickly arraigned on a charge of violating the Neutrality Act by illegally exporting an implement of war—the B-17.

He was released in $1000 bail pending Federal Grand Jury action.

Schindler and the eight others flew back from the Azores in a Pan American Airways plane.

They were met at La Guardia Field by officials from the FBI immigration, public health, customs, State Department and Civil Aeronautics Administration.

Two of the men were ordered to Ellis Island because their papers "were not in order." They were Hyman Mark, 25, and Sholom Solowitz, 25, both of Brooklyn.

A State Department representative picked up passports of the six others and permitted them to leave.

There was no word here about nine other men who were in the plane when it landed in the Azores.

Schindler and his eight companions took off from the Westchester County, N. Y., airport two weeks ago and landed at Halifax. They were given clearance to fly back to Westchester.

Halifax officials said that as the plane was taking off there, it taxied to the end of the wrong runway. Apparently, the Halifax source said, the nine other men boarded the plane during the few minutes at the end of the dark runway.

Israel Protests Palestine Truce Board to U. N. Council

Lake Success, N. Y., July 24 (U.P.).The 10-week-old state of Israel tonight filed with the United Nations Security Council a strongly worded complaint against the Council's three-nation truce commission in Palestine.

Israel's U. N. representative, Aubrey S. Eban, blasted the commission for charges it made against the Jews in connection with the Arab-Israeli struggle for Jeursalem.

The commission—composed of American, French and Belgian representatives—charged the Jews in Jerusalem appeared to be "increasingly inclined to ignore the most elementary rules of international war" and were plotting to incorporate the city in Israel's borders.

Charge Vague Insinuations

Israel tonight accused the commission of indulging in "vague insinuations unsupported by the facts."

The fledgling state said:

"Anxiety over the international regime for Jerusalem would more appropriately have been expressed when the armies of foreign Arab states launched a brutal and destructive attack upon the Holy City with the object of annexing it for themselves; or when the United Nations mediator made a tentative suggestion to place Jerusalem under the rule of King Abdullah of Trans-Jordan."

A British Foreign Office spokesman revealed in London that Britain definitely would bring before the Security Council its complaint against Israel's refusal to release five Britons kidnaped in Jerusalem recently.

The Council will take up Tuesday morning a Syrian proposal to ask the international court for an "advisory opinion" on the legality of the new Jewish state.

Blaze Grounds DC-6 Flying Over Grand Canyon

Phoenix, Ariz., July 24 (U.P.).—An American Airlines DC-6 was forced to land here last night by fire which broke out in the baggage compartment when the plane was over the Grand Canyon in Arizona.

Capt. Robert Retz, San Francisco, the pilot, said only a "small area" was burned, and the flames were controlled by an automatic extinguishing system while the plane was still in the air.

Twelve passengers were aboard. Fires of similiar nature last winter caused the Civil Aeronautics Administration to ground all DC-6's pending inspection.

Big Mystery Craft Reported by Pilots

Atlanta, Ga., July 24 (U.P.)—Two pilots of Eastern Air Lines, who thought they'd seen everything, soberly announced today that they had encountered a giant, wingless, flame-throwing aircraft straight out of Buck Rogers.

Capt. Clarence Shipe Chiles and his co-pilot, John B. Whitted, corroborated each other's report of the fantastic plane, or whatever it was. They were flying along serenely in a DC-3 Eastern Airliner at 5000 feet about 20 miles southwest of Montgomery, Ala., early today when the thing came at them, they said. It looked like a B-29 "blown up about four times" and stripped of its wings.

"We looked out the right side of the cockpit and saw a tremendous light," Capt. Chiles said. "The first thing that came to my attention was the long stream of flame coming out of the rear end of the plane, or whatever it was.

"Then I noticed the two rows of square windows—we couldn't see any people aboard. It was traveling too fast for that.

"The aircraft seemed to be about four times the circumference of a B-29 fuselage but it was only a little longer. There were no wings whatever.

"The plane passed us on our right, then, as if the pilot had seen us and wanted to avoid us, it zoomed up into the same cloud it came out of. A 40-foot red flame shot out its rear end. A luminous glow, like a giant fluorescent light, ran along the belly of the thing."

Whitted, who said he had seen the Air Force's best jet planes not on the secret list, estimated its speed as much faster than any he had seen before.

"I'd say that when it shot up into the clouds it was going between 500 and 700 miles an hour," Whitted said. "I've seen real shooting stars and meteors—they look pretty close when you're a pilot—but I've never seen anything like this."

As the aircraft passed them, they said, their comparative small DC-3 fluttered in the "prop wash, jet-wash or rocket-wash. "It sent out tremendous shock waves."

Their plane was en route to Atlanta. The mystery ship appeared to be headed toward Mobile or New Orleans, the pilots said.

They said they encountered the Buck Rogers plane in the regular "airway," a 25-mile-wide strip designated by the CAA.

Eastern officials said authorities at Maxwell Field, Ala., did not know anything about the mystery ship.

Chiles and Whitted said 20 passengers were aboard their plane but all were asleep except C. L. McKelvie of Columbus, Ohio.

McKelvie said today he saw a flash of light "but no space ship."

McKelvie, assistant manager of the American Education Press, Columbus, was wide awake at 2:45 this morning when he saw the light.

McKelvie said he realized it was not lightning when the "light" flashed past in an unbroken line to disappear in a cloud.

"It was much redder in color," he said.

Voice From India

Freedom Urged for Scientists

SIR C. V. RAMAN
Scientist From India

One of India's top scientists, Sir Chandrasekhara Venkata Raman, who won the Nobel prize in 1930, said here yesterday scientists, to work their best, must be free of government interference.

He added he felt the reason the United States has "come so far in science is that it has freedom."

Raman made his comment while discussing government encouragement of science in India. The government of India is "enthusiastic about science," he said, the idea being that science can improve man's physical lot.

Teacher as well as researcher noted for his studies of the properties of diamonds, the Indian scientist expresesd opinion that, in the final analysis, "it is not the utilitarian but the philosophic viewpoint" that determines the quality of science.

He described his three ideals as scientist as follows:

"First, I stand for freedom of science," he said. The man of nature should study nature and follow his intellectual pursuits.

"Second, the man of science should bring help and guidance to young people.

"Third, no man of science has done his duty until he sees that the result of scientific study—and the scientific attitude—is brought to everyone. Scientific knowledge is not just for the few."

Raman came to the United States to attend the recent meeting of the Advisory Council of the International Bank of Reconstruction. He will leave Tuesday to attend the first International Congress of Crystallographers at Harvard University.

In India, he said the government has started a number of national laboratories and has taken steps to strengthen universities, but science there, he said, faces a difficulty in obtaining materials with whch to work.

Bruskin, Post Reporter, Heads U. S. Military News Division

Robert Bruskin, reporter on the staff of The Washington Post, will become chief of the news division in the new Office of Public Information, National Military Establishment, on August 2, the Office of the Secretary of Defense announced yesterday.

Bruskin

Bruskin, an employe of The Washington Post since December, 1946, has been granted a leave of absence by the paper to help organize the division.

The 38-year-old newsman has had long experience as a reporter. He began his newspaper career in 1933 in Chicago and worked in Baltimore before coming to Washington in 1940 as a reporter for the Evening Star. He served in the Army from February, 1941, to November, 1945, first as chief of public relations for the Caribbean Defense Command and then as executive to the chief of public relations, Allied Force Headquarters in England and North Africa. Later, as a lieutenant colonel, he was chief of counterintelligence for the Seventh Army during its drives in Sicily, Italy, France and Germany. After leaving the Army, he was chief of public relations for UNRRA in Germany.

Among Bruskin's assignments for The Washington Post were the last plenary session of the United Nations and the investigation of the withholding of crime statistics by the Police Department. He also has covered Congress.

Bruskin is married and lives with his wife and two children in Sleepy Hollow, Falls Church, Va.

Frenchwoman's Leap Fatal to Husband

Mulhouse, France, July 24 (U.P.). Mme. Marie Vogel, 54, tried to commit suicide yesterday by jumping from a window of her third floor apartment, according to a police announcement.

She landed on her husband, who was strolling in the courtyard below, and he died of a skull fracture. Mme. Vogel survived the jump, but was reported in grave condition.

5 Killed, 14 Injured In Bus Crash, Fire

St. Paul, Minn., July 24 (AP).—A head-on highway crash and ensuing fire today killed five men, four of them members of the Duluth club of the Northern Baseball League. Fourteen other team members were injured, seven critically.

The baseball players were riding in a Duluth team bus, piloted by the club manager, when it and a dry-ice truck collided on a rise in Hwy. 16 on the north edge of St. Paul shortly before noon.

The bus, hurled onto its side in the ditch, burst into flame, its gasoline tank ruptured.

Authorities credited passersby with saving the lives of at least 10 of the pallplayers by pulling them from the wreckage. Several were unconscious. All but 3 of the bus' 18 occupants were out of the vehicle when intense heat drove the rescuers away.

The Ramsey County Morgue listed as dead: George Treadwell, 42, Superior, Wis., manager of the team; James E. Grealish, St. Paul, driver of the truck; Gerald (Peanuts) Peterson, Proctor, Minn., outfielder; Gilbert Krirdla, 19, of Duluth, who played under the name of Gilbert Trible, outfielder; Donald Schuchman, St. Louis, pitcher.

35 Bus Passengers Hurt in Collision

Cimarron, Kans., July 24 (U.P.).—A west-bound Santa Fe Trailways bus crashed into a gasoline transport truck 4 miles west of here on U. S. Highway 50 South early today, injuring 35 persons.

The injured, all passengers on the bus, were taken to hospitals in Dodge City and Garden City. All except five resumed their trips after treatment.

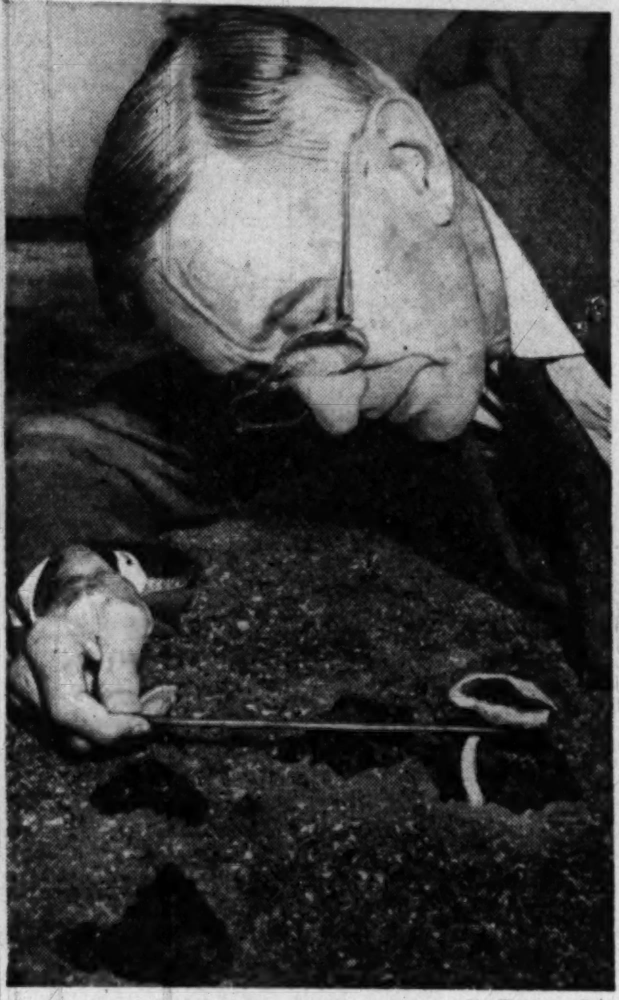
Resolute Mushroom Grows Up, Shatters an Asphalt Driveway



The Washington Post

IN DRIVEWAY—Fred B. Linton of 22 Holly ave., Takoma Park, Md., examines a mushroom that sprang up overnight in his driveway. It broke through an inch and a half of crushed stone and tar, hurling lumps of the paving substance as far as 14 inches as the picture shows

Overnight a mushroom sprang up in the driveway of the home of Fred B. Linton, 222 Holly ave., Takoma Park, Md., pushing up an inch-and-a-halfdeep section of paved roadway, and throwing it 14 inches.

The mushroom, about three inches tall above the drive, and 2½ inches across its top, quickly wilted in the sun.

Linton, retired employe of the Food and Drug Administration, called a group of scientists including Clarence A. Reed and Dr. William A. Stuart of the Agriculture Department, and Dr. John Stevenson, mycologist at Beltsville.

They identified the fungus as a mushroom, but reserved opinion on the species until they dig it up. Linton covered it with peach basket, protection against squirrel and sun.

The hole in the roadway forced is cone-shaped, small at the base and larger at the top, like a hole in a piece of glass shot by an air rifle. The generating power which shot up the mushroom acted much like a gun.

Stevenson said he had seen mushrooms lift concrete, but never break through a hard surface. The mushroom spore probably had been dormant beneath the paving since the top was laid about three years ago, and received just the right combination of heat and moisture to make it grow suddenly, he said.

Goldstein Named To Apply Navy's Electric Findings

Dr. Maxwell Karl Goldstein, radio engineer and electronics expert, yesterday was named to direct a new program research unit in the Office of Naval Research.

The unit will find practical applications for findings of the Office of Naval Research.

Goldstein, on the staff of the Naval Research Laboratory for nearly 10 years, has done extensive work in the fields of color music, multiplex vacuum tubes, telemetering, antiaircraft gun control and blind flying. He lives at 2701 Branch ave. se.

Goldstein was engaged by the Molded Insulation Co. of Philadelphia in 1933 to develop automatic remote indicating systems for antiaircraft gun control apparatus.

Home Prices Here Hit Peak

The price of homes in Washington reached a new high in June, a private firm of consulting engineers reported last night.

The firm's Nation-wide survey also showed that the price tag on the average house and lot here was about $1300 higher than the average for the country as a whole.

Highest prices in the country were found in Los Angeles, Chicago, New York and Boston.

These survey results, which also showed record prices for houses and lots throughout the Nation in June, were reported by United Industrial Associates, Inc.

Their figures showed that "the price tag on the average house and lot in June was $11,094" compared with $9749 a year ago and $4599 in 1939.

Washington figures were $12,352 for June, $11,357 last year and $5835 in 1939.

The firm emphasized that its figures were the prices of homes, not construction costs.

"New houses represent only a fraction of the total houses sold in the market, and builders sell their new houses at the market price rather than the cost of construction," the report said.

With the price of new houses in most areas enough higher than construction costs to encourage large construction programs, Kansas City, Mo., is the only remaining city where an average house can be bought for less than $7000, the firm said.

Red Blood Cells Must Be Kept Up If You Want To Feel Alive

Thousands Now Regaining Old Time Pep, Vigor and Drive By Releasing Vibrant Energy To Every Muscle, Fibre, Cell

Overwork, undue worry, and lack of certain foods often reduces the red-blood strength—and starved, weak, puny blood just hasn't the power to keep up your energy and drive.

Every day—every hour—millions of tiny red-blood-cells must pour forth from the marrow of your bones to replace those that are worn-out. A low blood count may affect you in several ways: no appetite, underweight, no energy, a run-down condition, lack of resistance to infection and disease.

To get real relief you must keep up your blood strength. Medical authorities, by analysis of the blood, have by positive proof shown that SSS Tonic is amazingly effective in building up low blood strength in non-organic nutritional anemia. This is due to the SSS Tonic formula which contains special and potent activating ingredients.

Also, SSS Tonic helps you enjoy the food you eat by increasing the gastric digestive juice when it is non-organically too little or scanty—thus the stomach will have little cause to get balky with gas, bloat and give off that sour food taste.

Don't wait! Energize your body with rich, red-blood. Start on SSS Tonic now. As vigorous blood surges throughout your whole body, greater freshness and strength should make you eat better, sleep better, feel better, work better, play better, have a healthy color glow in your skin—firm flesh fill out hollow places. Millions of bottles sold. Get a bottle from your drug store. SSS Tonic helps Build Sturdy Health.

Crediting of Service Without Deductions, Explained in Detail

(Last of a series of three articles on the Retirement Act.)

Another subject which is of special interest to employes, and is not well understood, is the crediting of service for which no deductions were taken.

Let's first take care of service before August 1, 1920. All this service is free and employes will receive credit for it just as though deductions had been made. No contribution is required for it because the original Retirement Act was not effective for deduction purposes until August 1, 1920.

Service after August 1, 1920, for which no deductions were taken (temporary, unclassified and excepted service, for instance) represents what is known as an optional service credit purchase. The word "optional" means just what it says—the employe may do as he pleases about putting up the money. If he does not, he will still receive credit in figuring the time for retirement credit, but the annuity, first figured on the total service, must be reduced by one tenth of the amount of the unpaid deposit. For example, if the employe had served 30 years, 3 of which represented an optional service credit purchase amounting to $500, his annuity would first be computed on the basis of the 30 years and then reduced by $50 a year.

As to whether it is to an employe's advantage to make the optional deposit, each employe will have to decide for himself, on the basis of his own individual circumstances.

Now let's look at some actual cases handled by the Retirement Division—cases which illustrate the benefits which the Langer-Chavez-Stevenson Act of February 28, 1948, provides for widows and children.

1. An employe died after 46 years of service. He left a widow 62 years of age. She immediately received an annuity (because she was then past age 50) of $1248 a year ($104 a month). This was one half of the rate which would have been due her husband. Under the old law she would have received one lump-sum payment of the money to her husband's credit in the retirement fund.

2. Another employe died after 18 years of service, leaving a widow and two children, aged 14 and 17 years. The widow was not yet 50, but because she had the two minor children to care for she was in line for an immediate annuity of $44 a month, and each child receives $22 a month. The annuity to the 14-year child will terminate in 1952, when he reaches age 18 (unless he marries in the meantime) and the other child's annuity will terminate in 1949 when he becomes 18. The widow's annuity will continue until her death, unless she remarries.

3. An employe, who was a husband and father, died after 23 years of service. He was 41 years of age, and his widow was the same age. They had four children—twins, 3 years of age, a child aged 5 and one aged 7. The widow will receive an annuity of $792 a year, and each child will receive $228 a year. This will give the family an income of $1700 a year. The annuity to the twins will not terminate until 1963 (unless marriage takes place before this time) and the widow's own annuity will be paid to her until she remarries or dies.

4. This case involved a widow and six minor children. The widow was only 38 years of age when her husband died, but because of the children she was entitled to receive her annuity at once. On the basis of the husband's 17 years of service, the widow is receiving $468 a year, and each of the six minor children will receive $156 a year. The children range in age from 6 months to 15 years; thus the oldest will receive the annuity for three years (unless otherwise terminated by marriage) while the youngest will receive the income for 17½ years.

5. In this case the children were left orphans by the father's death. The father died after 11 years of service. The two children were 6 and 9 years of age. Because they do not have a mother's care and support, they will receive a more liberal allowance. The father's annuity would have been $626; on this basis each child will receive $312. They will be entitled to this protection until they reach age 18 or marry.

In all these cases, the only benefits payable under the old law would have been a single payment of the amount to the employe's credit in the retirement fund.

Escaped Sailor Captured in Va.

Apprentice Seaman Hiram Hubert, 23, of Eatonton, Ga., one of two Navy men who escaped July 6 from the brig of the Anacostia Naval Base, was picked up about 9 p. m. yesterday on a farm, 12 miles south of Warrenton, Va.

The Naval Shore Patrol here said Hubert was armed with a .38-caliber pistol he had taken from a guard when he made his escape. The other escapee, Aviation Machinist Mate Second Class Clifford R. Rhoads, 21, of Flint, Mich., turned himself up a few hours after the escape.

Hubert's rearrest was made by Naval Chief Petty Officer Carl R. Smith, working with FBI agents.

Joint-Fare Tickets Good Another Day, CTC Agrees

Court May Decide Monday if PUC or ICC Has Control Over Transit Rate

By Joseph Paull
Post Reporter

The Capital Transit Co. yesterday agreed to continue accepting low-rate joint-fare tickets to nearby Virginia points until 12:01 a. m. Tuesday.

The decision affects 17,000 riders commuting between Washington and the area of the Washington National Airport, the Pentagon, the Air Force Annex and the Navy Annex in Arlington. The commuters now pay 13.3 cents per one-way ride, but a District Court case now in progress may boost the rate to 20 cents.

The case began last week when Capital Transit asked the court to nullify the Interstate Commerce Commission order compelling the local transportation firm to accept and sell the joint-fare tickets at $1.60 for a book of 12. Capital Transit said it was bound by a Public Utilities Commission decision here setting all fares locally at 10 cents a ride or $1.50 for a weekly pass. It also contended the ICC was powerless in the case, since Capital Transit operates no lines into Virginia.

The company then announced it would cease honoring joint-fare tickets beginning at 12:01 a. m. Monday.

To stop this action, the ICC brought suit in court here.

A conference concerning it was held in the chambers of Justice James W. Morris. The result was that ICC agreed to drop its suit, Capital Transit extended its deadline by 24 hours, and Justice Morris scheduled a hearing on Capital Transit's suit for 9:45 a. m. Monday before Justice Alexander Holtzoff in District Court.

Named as defendants in Capital Transit's suit are the PUC, the ICC, the Attorney General, the United States Attorney here, and the two connecting Virginia lines—A. B. & W. Transit Co. and Washington, Virginia and Maryland Coach Co.

The Attorney General and the United States Attorney countered with a motion to dismiss the suit, contending that the court was without jurisdiction to decide the case and that the ICC acted properly in setting the prevailing rate.

The PUC has contended for more than a year that Capital Transit was correct in insisting that it is entitled to 10 cents from Virginia-bound passengers. Last year PUC joined with the transportation company in a test suit in District Court. It is to be decided by a three-judge tribunal which has not yet been impaneled.

The PUC was subsequently asked for a ruling and on July 20 ordered Capital Transit to cease honoring the joint-fare tickets.

Capital Transit Co. claims that if it obeys the ICC it is in jeopardy since it must perforce violate PUC orders.

The case is complicated by a recent ICC order which sets the one-way joint fare to Virginia at 16 cents beginning August 2. Of this sum, Capital Transit will get seven cents as compared to the 5.83 cents it gets from the prevailing 13.3 cent fare.

Capital Transit meets the Virginia carriers at 12th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw. If the joint fare is not used, passengers must pay 10 cents at that point for the ride into Virginia.

D. C. Youth Takes Fourth in Junior Chess Tournament

Hans Berliner, 19, of 1300 Clifton st. nw., yesterday placed fourth in the National Junior Chess Tournament held in Oak Ridge, Tenn.

An 18-year-old New Yorker, Arthur Bisquier, defeated runner-up Frank Anderson of Toronto, Canada, for the championship. Jim P. Cross, Glendale, Calif., finished in third place.

'Blue Baby' Greets Capital

The Washington Post

HEADING HOME—Shirly Brown, 5, "blue baby" shown with her mother at National Airport, waves a greeting to Washington. She stopped over on her trip from a Baltimore Hospital back to her home in Australia. In the background is the Trans-World Airline pilot flying mother and child to San Francisco

'Blue Baby,' In the Pink, Going Home

The last lap of a 20,000-mile trip that saved a 5-year-old Australian girl "blue baby" from death or lifelong invalidism began yesterday as she left Baltimore for her distant home.

Two months ago, blond, blue-eyed Shirley Brown of Allansford, Southern Victoria, Australia, couldn't run more than 20 or 30 yards without being completely exhausted. Her body could not get enough oxygen, and her lips and extremities had a bluish color.

Yesterday, thanks to the generosity of the people of her home town and the skill of surgeons at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, Shirley appeared to be as healthy and happy as any other 5-year-old.

In the few minutes while their San Francisco-bound plane stopped at the National Airport here, her father, William S. Brown, proprietor of a general store in Allansford, and Mrs. Brown, tried to tell about the almost "miraculous" events that had befallen the family.

They told how the people of Allansford, which has a population of about 1000, had raised more than $8000 to send the family of three to Baltimore and to pay for the delicate operation Shirley needed.

Shirley had been a listless "blue baby" from birth, Brown explained. She was unable to play games or run because an artery within her heart was abnormally small and could not send enough blood to the lungs. Though her lungs were normal, her blood failed to receive the amount of oxygen needed by every cell and tissue of the body.

The parents heard about the "blue baby" operations being performed by Drs. Alfred Blalock and Helen Taussig of Johns Hopkins.

The townspeople of Allansford solved the financial problem by a fund-raising campaign that touched virtually all its citizens and those of the nearby area.

When Shirley flew to this country, she had to use oxygen most of the way. As she left Baltimore, the oxygen mask she used was in her suitcase, a souvenir gift from Trans World Airline that she treasures highly. She calls it "Jimmie."

State Senator to Seek End Of Court Crime News Curb

Maryland State Senator D. Kenneth McLaughlin, Washington County Republican, announced yesterday he will support or introduce a bill to void any rule imposed by the courts on the press and radio in Maryland.

McLaughlin, a Hagerstown attorney, said he will press for the legislation at the next session of the Legislature.

He said his concern over the court rules came from a proposal that the Baltimore court code "barring discussion of a case before indictment and trial" be made applicable throughout Maryland.

McLaughlin said he believed the Legislature would also act "as far as Baltimore City is concerned."

"I feel," he said, "that the Legislature is opposed to bridling the press and radio."

In urging legislation at the next session, he said "such a measure should be the first order of business at Annapolis.

"I have a natural revulsion toward efforts of courts to muzzle the press. I have an idea that the Legislature is incensed with this development."

McLaughlin declined to comment on contempt of court citations issued against five Baltimore area radio stations and a radio commentator for their handling of the Eugene H. James case.

James, 31-year-old Baltimore janitor, recently confessed to the murder of two 11-year-old girls. He first admitted the Baltimore slaying of Marsha Brill, then after questioning by Washington detectives described how he killed Carol Bardwell here last June 27. He is to be tried in Baltimore September 20 for the murder of the Brill girl.

In another development yesterday, State's Attorney J. Bernard Wells asked attorneys for the radio stations cited for contempt to refrain from filing answers until after James' trial. The stations have been given until October 1 to show cause why they should not be adjudged in contempt.

Wells said he made his request to station attorneys after conferring with the court. What the court found objectionable in the radio broadcasts might conceivably be restated in the answers, he said.

The American Newspaper Publishers' Association and the National Association of Broadcasters have announced they will fight the Baltimore court code.

2 Heirs Here Get Share in Big Estate

Two District residents, father and son, will receive almost half a million dollars each as their share in the estate of the late Julius Goldman, New York lawyer and industrialist, who died in 1938.

Goldman's son, Marcus Goldman, of 707 20th st. nw., a scientist for the Geological Survey, receives 1/12 of the estate, tied up by stockholders' suits since 1938, and now valued at $5,467,366.31, according to a transfer tax appraisal filed in New York.

Richard Graybell Goldman, 24, a grandson, of 720 21st st. nw., will receive the same share, to be held in trust until he reaches 25.

A twelfth of the estate also was willed to each of two other grandsons, Thomas Alder Goldman, 29, American vice consul at Rotterdam, and the late Daniel Ware Goldman, both brothers of Richard.

Father, Son Are Accused In Shooting

George Bostock In Serious Condition After Incident at Neighbor's Home

A 58-year-old printer and his son pleaded innocent in Municipal Court yesterday in the shooting and dangerous wounding of a Catholic University student on their lawn Friday night.

The student, George H. Bostock, 21, of Carlisle, Pa., was in critical condition last night in Gallinger Hospital. A .32 caliber bullet broke bones in his right arm and lodged in the left lung near his heart.

The printer, Joseph W. Cotter jr., of 1215 Monroe st. ne., who police say fired the shot, was placed under $2000 bond on a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon. The son, Joseph W. Cotter, 3d, 34, a salesman, charged with simple assault, was freed under $500 bond. The father is employed by the Evening Star.

According to the Municipal Court charges, the shooting occurred after the younger Cotter attempted to intervene in a fight the wounded youth was having with his brother, William F. Bostock, 19, also a Catholic University student. Both youths are the Cotters' neighbors and reside at 1221 Monroe st. ne.

William Bostock signed a statement saying that a "disagreement" several months old flared up again while he and his brother were in a nearby tavern Friday evening. William said they decided to settle it with a fist fight.

Somehow, the fight landed in the Cotter yard. The younger Cotter's wife worried over neighborhood housebreakings, called her husband, police said.

He went into the yard and stopped the fight. Cotter claims that the Bostocks then started fighting with him. The Bostocks deny this. The elder Cotter then came into the yard with his 32-caliber pistol, police said.

Cotter, sr., said he tried to stop the fight and was pushed into the bushes, police related. There was some evidence, police said, that one of the Bostock brothers started toward the Cotter house apparently by mistake. The younger Cotter then entered the fight again, police said.

During this fracas, the gun went off and George Bostock fell wounded.

The United States Attorney's office charged both Cotters.

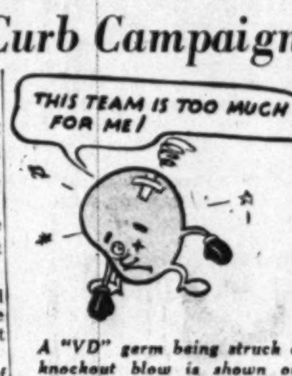
Women to Be Checked First In Gonorrhea Curb Campaign

By John London
Post Reporter



THIS TEAM IS TOO MUCH FOR ME!
VD

A "VD" germ being struck a knockout blow is shown on one of the Health Department pamphlets being distributed to Washingtonians in the current campaign against gonorrhea.

The main target of the year-long gonorrhea control drive launched last week in the District is women, rather than men.

This is because there are more women who have gonorrhea—but don't know it.

So Dr. S. Ross Taggart, head of the District venereal disease bureau believes. He explains it this way:

First of all, symptoms of gonorrhea, pain in urination and an unusual discharge from the sex organs, are less pronounced in females than in males.

Avoid Treatments

Secondly, even when women recognize that they have gonorrhea, they are more reticent about applying to a District clinic or a private physician for treatment.

These considerations, Dr. Taggart believes, account for the fact that only 32.8 per cent of the 12,361 persons treated for gonorrhea at District clinics last year were females.

Dr. Taggart also points out that gonorrhea can cause more serious complications in women than in men.

In either sex, gonococci germs can cause sterility by producing scar tissues which block passages through which the spermatoza or ova must pass for fertilization. In either men or women, gonorrhea can affect the joints and cause gonorrheal arthritis; produce infections in the sex organs or settle on heart valves and cause blood poisoning.

Can Infect Cervix.

Besides these possible misfortunes, gonorrhea in a woman can infect the cervix and fallopian tubes; form abscesses in the Bartholin glands or pelvic cavity. The last complication is often mistaken for appendicitis.

Then, too, as a mother is delivering a child, gonorrhea germs from the birth canal may infect the infant's eyes, causing blindness. To counteract this danger, District law requires the placing of silver nitrate solution in the eyes of the new-born.

As to women affected with gonorrhea, Dr. Taggart is sure very few are prostitutes.

Dr. Taggart says that overwhelmingly, infected men treated at clinics report they had contact with nonprofessional girl friends. The casual, amateur pickup, in fact, accounts for 98.5 per cent of infections among men treated at clinics, studies show.

25,000 Infected Here

Authorities estimate there currently are some 25,000 victims of gonorrhea in the District. Of these at least 13,000 are females.

The largest age group is probably the 20 to 24-year-olds, who accounted for 35.4 per cent of known female cases last year.

Past studies also indicate that about 3 per cent are under 15; 21 per cent are 15 to 19; 20 per cent are 25 to 29; 9 per cent are 30 to 34 and about 11 per cent are 35 and over.

Aim of the current drive to curb gonorrhea in the District is to warn the public as to how to guard against infection; how to recognize symptoms—and to urge those with suspicions of symptoms to apply to private physicians, or free District clinics, for immediate treatment. Free penicillin is being offered to private physicians and hundreds of thousands of information pamphlets directed at the public.

Women who suspect they may have gonorrhea or other venereal disease may call a special Venereal Disease Information number, MEtropolitan-4600, for advice and direction to a clinic or private doctor.

D. C. Drinks More Beer, Less Whisky

Washingtonians drank three million more gallons of alcoholic beverages during the past fiscal year than the year before, but it was the wrong kind of drinks, as far as the District's exchequer was concerned.

The District's Alcoholic Beverage Control Board in its annual report released yesterday noted that consumption of all alcoholic beverages, except beer, jumped 1,305,106 gallons, and the sale of beer increased by 2,260,191 gallons.

But this boost in the lighter potions was accompanied by a "decided decrease" in the sale of hard liquor, and that is where the higher taxes are laid. ABC reported a "marked increase" in the sale of tax stamps for wines and champagnes, as well as beer taxes, but these are "in the lower tax rates," it was noted.

Libraries Report More Demand for Children's Books

Washingtonians borrowed 2,717,000 books from District public libraries during the year ending June 30—151,000 more books than they took out last year—Assistant Librarian Ralph L. Thompson announced yesterday.

About 50 per cent of the library's increased circulation is in children's books, Thompson said, due partly to Washington's growing child population and partly to the libraries' longer children's room hours.

Adults asked for more practical books about their jobs, homes and families, he said, and particularly for how-to-do-it books on making and repairing things in the home. Mental hygiene was a popular topic, specially texts on child development and adolescent problems.

Underpass Project Hearing to Reopen

A hearing begun last October on the construction of an underpass at Pennsylvania and Constitution aves. nw., will be reopened August 11 for consideration of the project, and other plans for ending traffic bottlenecks.

The hearing will be held by the District Commissioners and the District Public Utilities Comission, sitting as a joint board.

This was opposed at the October hearing by the Capital Transit Co. as too costly and inflexible.

The firm said approval of the underpass would result in a $250,000 outlay for track changes. The Potomac Electric Power Co. said relocating its underground equipment would run to about $195,000.

Fatal Fall From Trolley To Be Probed By Coroner

Magruder Orders Inquest Tuesday; Motorman Released After Questioning

A coroner's inquest was called yesterday to determine why the streetcar from which a 19-year-old youth fell to his death last Wednesday didn't stop when the center door was forced open.

The inquest was set by Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, for 11:30 a. m. Tuesday following a conference with Detective Sergt. Emmett Waters, of the Accident Investigation Unit.

The motorman, Ralph Gurganious, 25, 610 Quackenbos st. nw., was released in custody of the Capital Transit Co. yesterday for appearance at the inquest.

The youth, Charles Franklin Wilson, 1333 10th st. nw., died Thursday in Freedmen's Hospital from a fractured skull received when he fell from the moving streetcar in the 5700 block of Georgia ave. nw.

Cars of the Capital Transit Co. are equipped with an automatic safety device which applies the brakes when the door is opened while the car is in motion, police said. This safety device can be cut off with a switch on the motorman's instrument panel to move the car if the door should become jammed, they also said.

Tests conducted by police and transit company officials after the accident showed that a car moving at 20 miles an hour would come to a stop within a half a block after the door is forced open if the safety device is operating, they said, while if it is inoperative the car would continue without slackening speed.

Events leading up to the accident have been reconstructed by police through statements of witnesses as follows:

Wilson and five other youths got on the streetcar at Georgia and Florida aves. nw., carrying band instruments and amused themselves aboard by playing music. A small collection was obtained from fellow passengers.

At Shepherd st. they were warned to be quiet or get off the car. They replied they were going to Kennedy st. and would either ride there or get their money back.

When the car halted at Kennedy st. for a red light the group attempted to get off through the center door, but the motorman beckoned them to the front of the car. All came to the front except Wilson. The car moved on when the light changed with him still at the center door.

Two blocks further on Wilson fell through the opened door of the moving car.

Police also say they have the testimony of a motorist following the streetcar that the door was open "for at least a block" before the youth came hurtling out.

Police say Gurganious told them he knew nothing of the fall until his car was stopped on its return trip from Takoma Park.

Collision With Auto Injures Boy Cyclist

A 15-year-old cyclist suffered serious head injuries yesterday morning when his vehicle was in collision with an automobile at 9th and Quackenbos sts. nw.

The cyclist, Carl Van Lowe, jr., 414 Longfellow st. nw., was admitted to Sibley Hospital. Driver of the automobile was identified by police as Abe Yolom, 55, of 6024 8th st. nw. He was charged with failure to yield right of way.

About 9 o'clock last night three sailors were injured, two seriously, when the automobile in which they were riding crashed into an abutment of the R. F. & P. Railroad on Route 624, near Lorton, Va. They were taken to Fort Belvoir Hospital, Virginia State Police reported. Names and addresses were not immediately available.

Two persons were injured in a truck-automobile collision at 14th and Franklin sts. ne.

Admitted to Casualty Hospital were Raymond G. Liembach, 17, of 4518 3rd st. se., identified as driver of the automobile, right arm cuts, and Joseph Masiello, 22, of 110 Pitt st., Alexandria, a passenger, head cuts, multiple contusions and abrasions.

Driver of the truck, according to police, was James L. Burns, 1277 Penn st. ne.

A Princes Georges County man suffered head injuries when the automobile in which he was a passenger missed a left turn, squeezed between two guard rails and plunged 30 feet into a creek at Marlboro pike and Dower House rd., near Marlboro.

The man, Philip Marshall, Dower House rd., near Marlboro, was taken to Casualty Hospital by the Marlboro Rescue Squad.

Prince Georges County police charged the driver, Louise Helen Hamilton, 25, Brown's Station, Md., with reckless driving. A hearing was set for July 30 in Marlboro Police Court.

Late registration will be accepted for the second session through August 3. The term will last until September 17.

Area News in Brief

Bernstein Slayers Denied Clemency

President Truman has denied Executive clemency to two men convicted of the 1946 murder of Maurice L. Berstein, 52-year-old Washington druggist.

The action apparently sealed the doom of the slayers, Jessie James Patton, 23, and Reginald J. Wheeler, 28. Both are now in the District Jail and are scheduled to be electrocuted August 20.

Mr. Truman's decision was made without comment. Bernstein was fatally shot during a $125 holdup in his drug and liquor store at 1786 Florida ave. nw., on June 5, 1946. Wheeler was the triggerman, and Patton served as the lookout.

As is usual in capital offense cases here, the conviction was carried up to the Supreme Court, but all appeals were fruitless.

Picnic Is Postponed

The annual picnic for Army Medical Department personnel and Walter Reed General Hospital's patients, originally scheduled for Tuesday, has been postponed until August 27, Maj. Gen. George C. Beach, commanding officer, announced yesterday.

The "family" picnic was canceled because of the official 30-day mourning period for General of the Armies John J. Pershing. The 173d anniversary of the organization of the Army's Medical Department will be observed Tuesday.

Runaway Horse Furor

Two runaway horses yesterday knocked over a 12-foot metal scaffold, sending two sheet-metal workers scurrying for safety to the roof of O Street Market at 7th and O sts. nw.

Police said the horses, owned by Major Witchell, 1244 Union st. sw., an ice and wood vendor, were alarmed by a prankster on a truck, who yanked the horses' harness.

The scaffold was knocked over when Witchell's mare stumbled in the intersection. Morris P. Finley, 4466 MacArthur blvd. nw., and his brother, Joseph M. Finley, 734 N. Vermont st., Arlington, saw the horses coming in time to climb to the roof.

Cantaloupes Condemned

Cantaloupes led the list of foods condemned by the District Health Department last week. A total of 3180 pounds of foodstuffs were found unfit in three condemnations by food inspectors. Ten cases were taken to Municipal Court and resulted in fines and forfeitures amounting to $260.

Veterans Make Appeal

The United American Veterans yesterday urged Congress to enact a law giving veterans the right to bring suit against the Veterans Administration.

In a resolution sent to President Truman and Congress, the group asked this action be taken to let veterans gain relief from "misinterpretations" of the law by the Board of Adjudication in handling veterans' claims.

Heads Blood Committee

W. W. McCollum, chairman of the Arlington County Chapter, American Red Cross, announced the appointment yesterday of Mrs. I. Newton Miller, 3330 North Albemarle st., Arlington, as chairman of the chapter's blood program committee.

Mrs. Miller replaces Caldwell C. Kendrick, who resigned. She urged Arlingtonians between the ages of 16 and 60 to make blood donations, pointing out the chapter at present cannot meet the needs of Arlington Hospital.

Jobs Open at Ft. Meade

An acute need for workers in the construction trades at Fort George G. Meade, Maryland, was reported yesterday by James W. Salyers, civilian personnel officer.

Most needed are carpenters, grade 12; plumbers, grade 11; steamfitters, grade 14; electricians, grade 15, and sheet metal workers, grade 14.

Separate Rows

Neighbors Die of Knife Wounds

Two men living within five blocks of each other died in Freedmen's Hospital last night as a result of knife wounds suffered in separate altercations an hour apart.

Police identified the victims as:

James R. Mills, 32, 1023 8th st. nw., stabbed in the right chest with a pocket knife during an altercation at 1114 Congress ct. nw. at 5:15 p. m. He was pronounced dead at 9 p. m.

James Johnson, 28, 1522 8th st. nw., slashed in the throat at 6:18 p. m. at 458 K st. nw. after he had been accused, according to police, of being a police informer. He died at 8:10 p. m.

Lookouts were broadcast for both assailants. Mills' slayer was described as a dark-skinned Negro, 25 years old, 5 feet 7 inches, 156 pounds, and wearing a gray suit, light straw Panama hat and white shirt, open at the throat. Johnson's attacker was described as a dark-skinned Negro, 25 years, 5 feet 10 inches, 165 pounds, and wearing khaki trousers, white shirt and light cap.

Post Correspondent Injured in Diving

Betty Ruth McDevitt, a correspondent for The Washington Post in Montgomery County, suffered a brain concussion and possible skull fracture when she fell from a diving board yesterday.

Mrs. McDevitt, who lives at 1320 ale dr., Silver Spring, was attending an outing of the Montgomery County Press Association at the estates of R. Anders Lofstrand on Viers Mill rd., near Rockville.

After treatment by a Rockville physician, Mrs. McDevitt was taken to Suburban Hospital, Bethesda.

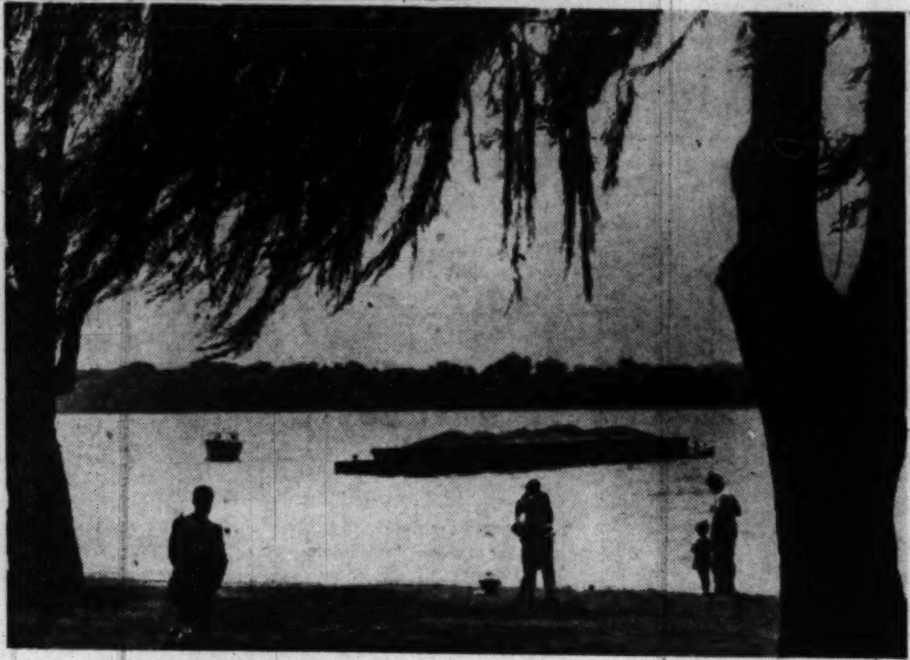
Gravel Barge Runs Aground in Potomac



The Washington Post

LEFT BEHIND—Fishermen on shore watch the Smoot Sand & Gravel Co. gravel barge which ran aground yesterday below Memorial Bridge. The tug, Virginia, was headed upstream towing three loaded barges, when the last in the line was swung about by the wind and grounded. It had to be cut loose and left behind until the tug could deliver the other two to the K st. dock and return to pull it loose

Msgr. Fannon Rites to Be On Tuesday

Msgr. John F. Fannon, 76, pastor of the Church of the Nativity in Brightwood, will lie in state in the church rectory, 6000 Georgia ave. nw., until 4 p. m. Monday.

The body then will be removed to the church, where the Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington, will pontificate at a solemn requiem mass at 10:30 a. m. Tuesday.

Monsignor Fannon died Friday after a long illness. He had been pastor of the church for 18 years.

The Most Rev. John M. McNamara, auxiliary Bishop of Washington, will deliver the eulogy at the mass Tuesday. The priest's choir of the archdiocese will sing responses. Three of Monsignor Fannon's nephews, the Rev. Thomas J. Fannon as deacon, the Rev. Robert Fannon as subdeacon, and the Rev. Donald J. Fannon as assistant priest, will participate in the mass.

Deacons of honor will be the Right Rev. John W. Dowling of Holy Name Church, Washington, and the Right Rev. John Eckenrode, pastor of St. Mary's Church, Govans, Md. The Rev. Stephen J. Hogan of Holy Redeemer Church, Kensington, Md., and the Rev. Austin L. Healy, assistant pastor of the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, Baltimore, will participate as chaplains, and the Rev. Walter J. Schmitz, S. S., of Catholic University, will be master of ceremonies.

Tuesday evening Monsignor Fannon's body will be transferred to St. Patrick's Church, Mount Savage, Md., where a funeral mass will be said at 10 a. m. Wednesday. Burial will be in St. Patrick's Cemetery.

Tree Foils Attempt

Bridge Leap Is Second Try At Suicide

A 23-year-old Takoma Park man was resting comfortably in Gallinger Hospital yesterday following his second futile attempt within three months to end his life.

The man, Lewis R. Lester of 703 Carroll ave., Takoma Park, failed in his attempt Friday night to die by leaping from the Calvert Street Bridge when he landed in a tree 50 feet below.

Police homicide squad members who interviewed Lester said he expressed disappointment and still wanted to die.

The youth would not give any reason, Detective Sergt. Bernard Crook said.

Asked by Crook if he had been affected by his three years' service in the Navy, Lester said he had seen action, but had not been disturbed by it.

Records show Lester was in Washington Sanitarium from May 9 to 14 this year after having shot himself in the chest.

Friday night Lester hailed a cab driven by Dabney W. Weisinger of 1427 Girard st. nw. and asked to be taken to the Calvert Bridge. When Weisinger started to stop at the east end of the bridge, Lester told him to drive to the center, according to police.

After Weisinger had complied, Lester leaped out, ran over to the rail, looked down, then returned. He tossed his coat and other personal effects into the cab, then jumped.

Police had to pry the branches of the tree apart to extricate Lester, who suffered lacerations of the face, arms and chest, but no serious injury. He was taken to Emergency Hospital and later transferred to Gallinger.

A notebook of Lester's found in the cab contained several pages of scribbled notes of which police could make nothing and gave no clew as to a possible motive.

His father, Lewis Lester, sr., of Elbert, W. Va., was notified. His mother is said to be in California.

Lieut. G. W. Todd, Jr.

Salisbury, Md., July 24 (AP).—Funeral services will be held here Monday for Naval Lieut. George W. Todd, jr., 55, whose body was found Thursday in Chesapeake Bay. Todd disappeared during a sailboat trip from Cambridge, Md., to Charleston, S. C. His boat beached itself near Mathews, Va.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, July 24 (AP). Charles C. Hunt, 81, grand secretary emeritus of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Iowa and a nationally known member of the Masonic lodges, died at his home here today.

Normal Polio Year Indicated For D. C. Area

There is no indication that the Washington area will have more than the normal number of polio cases this year, Dr. James G. Cumming, director of the Bureau of Preventable Diseases, assured parents yesterday.

The District Health Department official made his statement on a day which saw no new cases of infantile paralysis reported in this area.

However, a case was reported in Petersburg, Va.—the first there since 1945—that brought to 62 the number of polio cases reported in Virginia. The victim was a 7-month-old girl.

51 Deaths in North Carolina

The polio epidemic in North Carolina reached a record high of 885 cases yesterday. There have been 51 deaths in the State. The previous North Carolina high was 878 cases reported in 1944.

He said that so far this year only 10 cases have been reported. Last year the cases in Washington proper totaled 23.

Dr. Cumming declared polio was diagnosed only when there was a definite paralysis. In that era, he added, practically all cases had some permanent paralysis.

Now, however, because of advances in diagnoses and laboratory techniques and the general alertness of parents it is possible to recognize the disease earlier and also to diagnose the mild abortive and nonparalytic cases.

This, he said, will mean more polio cases reported than in earlier years but will also mean there will be a smaller percentage with even a limited amount of paralysis.

No Fatalities to Date

"Among the 22 cases reported for the entire area," said Dr. Cumming, "there have been no deaths to date, and it is the general consensus that only a very small percentage will have permanent paralysis or even temporary weakness of certain muscle groups."

Meanwhile, one of two young polio victims admitted to Children's Hospital July 14 was reported sufficiently recovered to be able to go home today.

She is Wanda DuKate, 3, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George A. DuKate, of 1120 N. Kensington st., Arlington. Wanda and her sister, Sheron, 4, were admitted to the hospital on the same day.

Her mother said the younger girl suffered only the mild abortive form of the disease. However, Sheron is afflicted with the more serious bulbar type. She has shown some improvement under treatment and her mother said doctors consider her condition as satisfactory.

Roanoke Launching DDT Spray Campaign

Roanoke, Va., July 24 (AP).—Roanoke is launching an intensive DDT spray campaign with a frank statement from authorities that it is a precautionary measure against polio and with an appeal for public cooperation.

There have been no cases in the city, but there are five children in the polio ward at Roanoke Hospital who have been brought in.

Harold E. West Is Dead in Md.; Was PSC Head

Harold E. West, 81, former editor of the Baltimore Sunday Sun and chairman of the Maryland Public Service Commission from 1925 to 1936, died yesterday at 2:05 p. m., at his home in West Haven, Md., after a serious illness of weeks. Death was attributed to a heart ailment.

Mr. West

Mr. West had been a White House correspondent here for a while during the Woodrow Wilson Administration.

A native of Baltimore, he was born on November 14, 1866. He was about 16 years old when he went to work at the Sun as a copy boy. He soon became a reporter.

Mr. West was a reporter for more than 20 years before he resigned from the Sun in 1911, to become owner and editor of the Staunton (Va.) Dispatch-News. For about six months he managed the Virginia newspaper and then returned to the Sun.

After a period of some months as White House correspondent here, he was named special assignments reporter, and became city editor of the Evening Sun in 1916. Mr. West held a succession of executive positions with the Sunpapers until he was appointed by the late Gov. Albert C. Ritchie to serve as a member of the Maryland Public Service Commission.

After his term as chairman of the commission expired, in 1936, Mr. West served the commission as an examiner and consultant until he retired in 1942.

He is survived by two daughters, Mrs. James Frederick Hazen and Miss Virginia Wheat West; two sons, William Thorogood West and John Taliaferro West; two sisters, Miss Ada Opie West and Miss Elizabeth Evelyn West, and two brothers, Chauncey A. West and Herbert J. West.

Funeral arrangements have not been completed.

Daniel Foley, Veteran, Dies

Daniel Foley, 70, retired Metropolitan policeman, died yesterday in Mount Alto Hospital after an illness of two months.

Mr. Foley, whose home was at 1838 Ingleside ter. nw., had been in ill health for several years.

A native of County Kerry, Ireland, he came to this country as a boy and spent his youth in Newburgh, N. Y. He came to Washington just after the turn of the century and received his appointment to the police force soon after.

During World War I he was shot in the lung by an automobile thief he was arresting and was placed on light duty after his recovery. He retired about five years ago.

Mr. Foley was a veteran of the Spanish-American War and a past commander of Hardin Camp, United Spanish War Veterans. He was treasurer of the Mount Pleasant Citizens Association for many years and was a member of the Holy Name Society.

Mr. Foley leaves a son, Daniel J. Foley, of Washington, and four daughters, Mrs. Katherine Latimer, Silver Spring; Mrs. Helen Lyon, Takoma Park; Mrs. Margaret Thomas, Arlington, and Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson, Washington.

Funeral services will be held Wednesday at 9:30 a. m. at the Timothy Hanlon funeral home, 3831 Georgia ave. nw., with requiem mass at 10 at the Shrine of the Sacred Heart, 16th st. and Park rd. nw. Interment will be in Arlington National Cemetery.

L. M. Cooley, ICC Executive, 59, Succumbs

Leonard Mast Cooley, 59, chief of the motor passenger branch of the Interstate Commerce Commission, died Friday morning of a heart attack at his home, 5939 Utah ave. nw.

Mr. Cooley, born and educated in Washington, worked for many years for the Southern Railway Co., and was later secretary for the United States Shipping board. About 20 years ago he went to work for the Interstate Commerce Commission.

He was a member of St. Paul's Lutheran Church.

He is survived by his widow, Lillian L. Cooley; a daughter, Mrs. Dorothy A. Weir, and two granddaughters, all of Washington; two brothers, Melton and Richard Cooley of Washington; and three sisters, Mrs. Mildred Morris and Mrs. Gertrude Stewart of Washington, and Mrs. Esther Clokey of Atlanta.

Services will be held Tuesday at 10 a. m. at the S. H. Hines funeral home, 2901 14th st. nw., with burial in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

Oscar Edward Cesare

Stamford, Conn., July 24 (AP).—Oscar Edward Cesare, 63, artist and political cartoonist, whose sketches of persons in public life were published in many leading newspapers and magazines, died today.

Perhaps his most famous single piece of work was a sketch and an interview with Lenin in Moscow in the latter part of 1922, which were published in the Sunday magazine of the New York Times.

Cesare was born in Sweden and studied art in Paris before coming to this country at the age of 18. His first political cartoons appeared in the New York World. His work also appeared in the New York Sun and the New York Post.

He became a regular contributor to the Sunday magazine of the New York Times in 1920.

His first marriage, to Margaret Porter, the daughter of O. Henry, was ended by divorce in 1916. He is survived by his second wife, the former Ann Valentine of Richmond, Va., and a son, Valentine Cesare.

Senator Pietro Toselli

Mantua, Italy, July 24 (U.P.).—Leftwing Socialist Senator Pietro Toselli died at his home here last night after a heart attack. He was 68. Toselli was a professor at Bologna University.

Three Counties Vie for Privilege of Prosecuting Ohio Killer; Pal's Body Returned Home

Celina, Ohio, July 24 (AP).—Robert (Murli) Daniels, 24, sulked in a Celina cell today as three Ohio counties—in which he and his gun-happy pal killed six persons in 14 days—pleaded for the privilege of prosecuting him.

The body of his partner in the two-week spree of wanton killings, 22-year-old John C. West, was en route to Parkersburg, W. Va., for burial.

As Daniels signed a confession last night to the killing of four men and two women, from four different families, he told Sheriff F. Roy Shaffer of Van Wert County, who captured him:

"Maybe it would have been better if I had been shot, too. I'm going to burn, anyway."

Ohioans were asking:

"What makes men do such things? What is the cause behind it? Were these boys the same type as John Dillinger and his gang?"

Dr. E. J. Humphreys, Ohio mental hygiene director; State Highway Patrol Supt. Col. George Mingle, Mansfield Reformatory Supt. Arthur Glattke and several others offered answers.

Dr. Humphreys said:

"Both Daniels and West were affected with syphilis. And a syphilized mind often leads to an alteration of personality, affecting the brain tissues as that disease does.

"Men with such minds are prone to exaggerate some things. Undoubtedly they were hostile to society, and in the killing of the Niebel family they probably heaped all their concentrated hate on them, as one grand gesture of contempt for society."

Glattke described West as mentally deficient, with the intelligence of a moron, and Daniels as of normal intelligence, but with a psychopathic personality and with no realization of the consequence.

"West and Daniels were just a couple of punks with a grudge who went gun crazy," Mingle said.

D. C. Pay Rise Held Hinging on New Taxes

dicated he will press for another subsitute tax: a rise in the whisky tax, now 50 cents a gallon here. It's $4 a gallon in the Senator's home State.

When the sales tax was discussed in public hearings, some local groups urged that the real estate taxes be raised instead. These groups are reviving their pressure along this line.

With the threat of another filibuster not only by Johnston but by several other legislators opposed to the sales tax in both major parties, Congress is deemed likely to seek some other remedy. At the moment, at least, the liquor and real estate taxes appear to be chief alternatives.

May Take Up Suffrage

Debate without action is likely on a third major local issue suffrage. The Auchincloss home rule and reorganization bill, despite all the months of work put into it, never got more than a single day's airing in the House. Observers feel that unless the Republican leadership decides to make a real issue of it, local suffrage will get no further than a couple more days of inconclusive debate in the House, and get nowhere at all in the Senate.

Both debate and action are anticipated over the recess appointment of FBI Agent Edward Allen Tamm to the District Court as Associate Justice. The Senate Judiciary Subcommittee sat on the appointment for months without taking action one way or another. With Tamm on the bench temporarily via a recess appointment, Congress is virtually sure to act: either okay the appointment, or definitely turn it down.

Suffrage Group Lists Session

Trustees and officers of the District of Columbia Central Suffrage Conference, Inc., will hold a special meeting Wednesday at 8:30 p. m., 700 Jackson pl. nw., to plan action during the special session of Congress.

Newly-elected vice president of the group is Guy A. Caponnetto, present exalted ruler of the Elks.

'Veteran' Retires

Veteran Aid Gets Tougher, Pioneer Says

Problems of District area veterans are "tougher and more involved" than they were shortly after World War II ended, a pioneer in the Veterans Service Center declared yesterday.

Mrs. Collins

Mrs. Ross F. Collins of Annapolis retired yesterday as chief of interviewers at the center. She was tendered a farewell luncheon at the Atlas Club by her coworkers.

Mrs. Collins, who helped organize the center in January, 1945, said that in the beginning of the center's operations, veterans' problems were relatively "routine." "They asked about their rights under the GI bill; then it was filling out terminal leave forms and later getting State bonuses," she explained.

"There was no difficulty then in getting employment for the returning servicemen. But now getting a job for the veteran—and particularly the disabled one"—is definitely difficult.

"Housing has always been a problem and still is. It has eased somewhat, but not for these who cannot afford high rents. We are finding apartments in the $85 to $125 a month class."

"Our policy has been to work away at each case untli we accomplish something," Mrs. Collins said.

Whitelaw Reid Weds

Purchase, N. Y., July 24 (AP).—Whitelaw Reid, 34, editor of the New York Herald Tribune, and Miss Joan Brandon, 18, were married today at the Reid home.

Mrs. Eleanor (Cissy) Patterson Found Dead of Heart Attack at Estate

terson, to continue his interests in the New York and Chicago papers.

Her cousin, Col. Robert R. McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Tribune, last night said she will be succeeded on the trust board by F. M. Flynn, president of the News Syndicate Co., publishers of the New York Daily News; Richard W. Clarke, executive editor of the Daily News, and Mrs. Mary Patterson, widow of the former Daily News publisher.

Central figure in the Capital's most temperamental social, political and journalistic feuds, she leaped into newspaper work (at its top) in July 1930 with a cable to William Randolph Hearst asking that she be made editor of his moribund Washington Herald. Her name alone meant news, and she got the job.

Society-bred child of a newspaper fortune, her early triumphs and tragedies, her unhappy marriage to a Russian count, her troubles to gain custody of her daughter, her costly divorce, were all forerunners to her impetuous career in editing and directing a newspaper, at a starting age of 46.

She rivalled her friend Hearst in sensationalism with the printed word, and matched him in dictatorial whims. Employes were "made" at her will, and fired at her displeasure. Frequently she rehired those she had fired, with no mention of former relations.

Mrs. Patterson, or "the Lady" as employes called her to her face, was a familiar and feared figure in the news rooms of her Washington paper. Nor were her editors ever farther from her decisions than the nearest telephones.

Mrs. Patterson was born Eleanor Medill Patterson. The courts restored her to her maiden name, with the prefix "Mrs.", at her petition shortly after the death of her second husband, Elmer Schlesinger, counsel for the U. S. Shipping Board, who died of a heart attack in 1929.

She was born on November 7, 1884, the daughter of Robert Wilson Patterson and Elinor Medill Patterson. Her mother was daughter of Joseph Medill, who founded the Chicago Tribune. Her father had risen from reporter to editor in chief of the Tribune.

A social career was planned for her; she attended Miss Hersey's finishing school in Boston; she made her society debut in her magnificent mansion at 15 Dupont Circle here (temporary White House during the Coolidge Administration), and in 1902 went abroad.

"Cissy," the name given her in childhood by her brother, the late Capt. Joseph Medill Patterson, publisher of the New York Daily News, went to Vienna with her uncle, Robert S. McCormick. There she met and fell in love with a dashing cavalry officer, Count Josef Gizycki.

Relatives and friends conspired to discourage the match, to no avail. They were married in glittering ceremony at the Dupont Circle mansion on April 4, 1904. They left for his castle, in the Russian Ukraine, and a daughter, Felicia, was born there in 1907.

The marriage was as unsuccessful as those who had sought to halt it feared it would be. Countess Gizycki gathered up her infant girl and fled with her to England. Her husband pursued, and touched off an international incident when he abducted Felicia and took her back to the Ukraine.

Her families brought their influence to bear. The White House interceded with the Czar, and in 1909, after a year of estrangement from her child, mother and daughter returned to this country. Eight more years passed by before the countess obtained a divorce in Chicago, reportedly settling for $500,000 with the count.

The countess, an expert horsewoman and huntress, went to a Wyoming ranch for a life of outdoors sport. There, Relicia met and later married a young reporter, Drew Pearson. He was something of a pet with "Cissy." He later won some of her most poisoned newspaper barbs.

The Pearsons had a daughter, Ellen, who won her grandmother over completely. They themselves were divorced five years after their marriage, and both subsequently remarried.

Mrs. Patterson married for the second time, in 1925. Her second husband was Elmer Schlesinger, Chicago lawyer, an old trustworthy, wealthy friend with a gift for persistence. The marriage was none too happy for "Cissy," friends said.

It wasn't long after her second husband's death that Mrs. Patterson got the inspiration, or the impulse, to become a newspaper editor. Her own family, seasoned by past experiences of such impulses, gave her no encouragement. Hearst, with a business eye on a newspaper name, did.

She was introduced to the staff of the Washington Herald in 1930 as its new editor. Behind her back, the employes were soothed with predictions she "wouldn't last long"

"The Lady" introduced innovations in reporting, editing and publishing that made other editors jeer, and cringe. She wrote articles, generally appearing in Page One boxes, and directed attacks on political and social figures that gained her no title of "Lady" to the public.

In newspaper direction, she confounded experienced editors by singling out relatively untried and inexperienced workers and raising them to positions of prominence, many largely by the "play" given their writings.

Many of her readers took sharp issue with editorial policy of her newspaper, which has echoed the isolationism of the Chicago Tribune and the New York Daily News. She incurred, too, the wrath of many followers of President Franklin Roosevelt with diatribes against the Nation's then chieftain.

Ultraconservative, passionately antiwar, anti-British and anti-Russian, the policy was described by its adherent, Mrs. Patterson, as pro-American. During the war she and her paper were publicly and privately castigated as giving aid to Hitler, but the criticism brought no let-up in her attacks.

She also brought an uncommon amount of news sense into her work, sometimes in spectacular fashion. Once, in 1931, she disappeared from a brilliant embassy party. Three days later she began a series of how she, disguised as a penniless unemployed maid, had fared in quest of a job. It made good reading.

Another time she admittedly failed on her own assignment—to interview Albert Einstein. As she told it later, she followed the eminent scientist along a desert trail near Palm Springs, Calif., only to catch up to him as he sunbathed au naturel.

She reported herself back, as bare of an interview as Einstein was of covering.

Frequently she turned on those she had favored. Drew Pearson became the headlined "Headache Boy" in Page One attacks on his personality, integrity and ability. President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who once had won her praise, was vilified to a point his followers charged bordered on invitation to assassination.

In 1937, she exercised her option with Hearst to lease the Herald and Hearst's evening paper here, The Times. She bought both Hearst papers in 1939. She combined the two as the Times-Herald and announced they'd come out in 'round-the-clock editions. Employes threatened to strike; she said she'd close the doors forever, and the employes gave up their contest.

"Cissy" was as quick to champion her pet interests as she was to attack her enemies. Some time in the transition between huntress and newspaper publisher she attached herself wholeheartedly to the antivivisection movement.

No friend or biographer marked the change save one rather romantic account which told of her revulsion at the sight of a bleeding mountain goat she had shot down in the Rockies. But antivivisectionist she became, and stories of dogs and cats became "musts" and received prominent play in the pages of her paper.

She, herself, favored French poodles, and her favorite was "Butch."

Stories are legion of her whims and idiosyncrasies. She loved fresh flowers and ordered them cut daily for her rooms. Some say her entrances were preceded with the spraying of flower fragrances.

Her firings became monotonous in repetition but seldom in their manner. One reporter was fired over the telephone when he mistook her voice for a subscriber. He was halfway across the country with his wallet full of severance pay when franctic editors intercepted him. It seems Mrs. Patterson dropped in a few days later and noted he was missing. When told she had fired him, she reportedly replied blandly, "Oh, I didn't mean him."

News of her death yesterday brought word from New York that her daughter, Countess Felicia Gizycka, was entraining for Washington. From Santa Monica, Calif., came word that her granddaughter, Ellen Cameron Pearson Arnold, and her great-grandson, Drew Pearson Arnold, were planning to fly here as soon as possible.

Europe Could Be a New Bataan Without A-Bomb

By C. B. Allen

NOTHING BUT the "equalizing" power of the atom bomb stands between America's European occupation forces and annihilation if current tension over the Berlin blockade results in an armed clash with Russia.

That is the considered conclusion of Army and Air Force leaders after evaluating the immediately available military man power which both sides could bring to bear.

Many of them have conceded as much for months in their private conversations, summing up the situation facing American troops in Germany as "another Bataan" in the event "cold war" tactics and other diplomatic maneuvers suddenly gave way to war.

This pessimistic prediction is based on Russian-American ground force odds of more than 30 to 1 in Europe and 20 to 1 if the United States Army's mobile striking force at home is included. Against the Red Army estimated strength of three million men in 175 organized combat divisions, the United States has 96,000 troops in Germany. Of these only about half are combat trained, even when constabulary forces are lumped with the tactical units at General Clay's command.

Within the United States, and available for an immediate emergency—though badly needed to train draftees and recruits—is a mobile force of 54,000 men. Nearly a fifth of these are service troops, the specialists and technicians.

Fleet Is Deploying

NAVY forces now in the European-Mediterranean area are at the lowest ebb in months. They consist of one carrier without planes, two carrying their regular aircraft complement, three cruisers and three destroyers.

One cruiser and four destroyers returned to Norfolk this week from a 30-warship cruise in European waters for Annapolis midshipmen and reserve officers; the battleship Missouri, the aircraft carrier Coral Sea, the cruiser Macon and four other destroyers are heading from the same rendezvous to participate in gunnery and training maneuvers starting next Monday at Guantanamo, Cuba.

The Air Force has one group of 30 B-29 Superfortresses in Germany—craft of the type that atom-blasted Hiroshima and Nagasaki—and two others on "routine training mission" visits in England. One group of 75 wartime P-47 Thunderbolt fighters is stationed in Germany and will be reinforced early next month by an equal number of F-80 jet fighters which left Panama this week aboard the aircraft carrier Sicily. Sixteen other F-80s, which completed a transatlantic flight to England last week, are slated to fly on to Germany for "at least two weeks" of "limited military maneuvers."

At home, the Air Force has eight more B-29 groups and is building up two others under its recently authorized 70-group expansion program. In addition, it has twelve 75-plane fighter groups within the United States, a few of which include F-80 or F-84 jet fighters.

Russia's present air force is estimated to comprise 14,000 combat planes, including "several hundred" jet fighters and "at least a hundred" long range bombers patterned after B-29s forced down in Russia during the war. Air Force officials have warned that the latter craft are capable of full load bombing raids on any city in the United States from known Siberian bases.

We Need a Year

THIS recapitulation of Russian-American striking power explains why military men count so heavily on America's possession of the atom bomb; first as a war deterrent and, second, as a last resort weapon of self-preservation.

On the long-range military preparedness score, the outlook for the United States is considerably brighter. Selective Service is about to begin working again and to swell the Army up from its present level of 524,000 men to its authorized strength of 837,000. The effectiveness of this program, however, is at least a year away.

National Guard and reserve training programs are rounding slowly into shape under the recent stimulus of a draft option. The Army's so-called "reserve affiliation" program with industry—under which whole military units are trained in connection with daily jobs—is shaping up better than ever before in the Nation's limited application of this type of preparedness.

Approximately 1500 concerns, ranging from construction firms and railroads to telephone and telegraph companies and even labor unions, have signed agreements to carry out training. A total of 372 engineering organizations alone have joined this program.

The Associated General Contractors of America have formed 88 of the 100 units they undertook to sponsor when they entered the program a year ago. The military importance of these projects can be judged from the fact that the full strength of the A. G. C. A. 's 100 units will be 2610 officers and warrant officers and 57,277 enlisted men.

Rival Money One Root of Reich Evil

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

THE PRESENT untenable situation in Berlin, though deeply rooted in the past, was brought to its current explosive state by a simple and inevitable money reform.

While both the western Allies and Russia instituted these reforms within a two-day period, and the effect of both is practically the same, the issue has raised a storm which shows no sign of blowing itself out. That is because the lack of a unified currency reform throughout Germany was due to political rather than economic differences and the issue will not be settled until those political differences are ironed out.

As far back as mid-1946, efforts were made, and four-power conferences were held, to find a means of stabilizing the German economy by agreement among all the victors in the war. These efforts finally collapsed when the Russians refused to retreat from their insistence that they, as well as the Allies, print the new currency.

The Allies had undergone an unhappy experience with a similar arrangement. In 1944 the United States supplied the Russians with duplicates of its own plates from which occupation marks were to be printed. The result was that by June, 1947, this country had redeemed in dollars, at 10 marks to the dollar, some 380 million dollars worth of Russian marks which had found their way into the western zone. A system of paying soldiers in certificates and prohibiting them from sending home more dollars than was represented by their pay was then adopted.

Extended to Berlin

AFTER DIZZILY mounting inflation had made a reform of the German currency absolutely necessary, the Western Allies announced a drastic currency reform for their occupation area. Then the USSR announced a reform to take effect June 22, and the Allies extended their own reform to their zones in Berlin.

The Soviets retaliated promptly. On June 24 they halted road and rail shipments into Berlin through their zone, which surrounds the city, giving "technical difficulties" as the reason. At the same time they cut off the supply of electric power from their zone. Five days later the United States and Britain opened the air supply of Berlin with 200 transport aircraft.

The difficulty stemmed from the Russian act in proclaiming their currency alone valid in all of Berlin. To have accepted this would have placed the Allies in the position of accepting Russian authority over the whole city. They compromised to the extent of permitting the use of Eastern currency within certain limits and payment of the major part of wages in Russian marks.

10 for 1 Ratio

DIFFERENCES between the two systems of reformed currency generally are minor. The Allies set up this arrangement:

A new unit of currency called the Deutsche Mark, containing 100 pfennig, was introduced. One of these could be purchased for 10 old Reichsmark, which had been pegged at the military exchange rate of 10 to the dollar. The Deutsche Mark was given a conversion factor of 30 cents or 3.33 marks to the dollar.

Holders of Reichsmark, however, were entitled to receive only 60 Deutsche Mark each, 40 at once and another 20 July 20. Meanwhile all bank depositors with accounts totaling more than 5000 Reichsmark per individual or 10,000 per business or professional man, were to undergo investigations into their tax accounts and the methods by which they acquired the money.

Business firms were allowed immediately 60 marks for wages for each employe and were permitted to apply for subsequent provisional clearances of their bank accounts for the same purpose. Even where bank accounts did not require investigation, half of them were blocked. An individual, for instance, who had 5000 Reichsmark in the bank was credited with 500 Deutsche Mark but could look forward to withdrawing only 250 of these for an indefinite period.

Huge Pay Raise

DEBTS MADE before June 19 were converted at the 10-for-1 rate, but wages, salaries, rentals, pensions, annuities and the like were converted 1 Deutsche Mark for 1 Reichsmark. The wage earner, in other words, would continue to receive the same number of new marks as he did of the old issue.

Controlled prices were unchanged and taxes on incomes under 250,000 marks, on corporations and on real estate were reduced, so business and industry would recover much of what amounted to a tremendous and sudden wage increase. Taxes were increased, however, on war profits, capital transactions and negotiable instruments.

Securities issued by the Reich were "not converted;" that is to say, they ceased to exist as part of the German economy. State, municipal and private securities were converted at the 10-to-1 rate.

Funds of public agencies and the occupying powers were not converted, but holders of these funds received new marks as they were needed to conduct business.

Banks and insurance companies were practically the only institutions (except black marketers) really hurt by the conversion. As of September 30, 1947, Reich securities in western zone banks represented 37.5 per cent of their assets, while bank loans and discounts represented only 10 per cent instead of the safe 30 to 40 per cent. Cash and claims against banks represented nearly 50 per cent of assets. About 12 per cent of their liabilities, or 28 billion old marks, were in government deposits and therefore were canceled. Thus, while losing 75 billion marks of assets in cancellation of Reich securities, they gained 28 billion old marks on the liability side, leaving a deficit of 47 billion old or 4.7 billion new marks.

THIS DEFICIT, according to economists here, can readily be made up by credits from central banks of states, a bookkeeping maneuver which would keep them solvent without involving any cash outlay. In the same manner, the ratio of loans and discounts can be raised to a safe level.

Insurance companies, with their incomes greatly reduced and their assets in Reich securities dissolved, will be in much the same boat. In their case, the government will have to step in and subsidize them temporarily by paper credits or by some such device as depositing with them government bonds bearing no interest and with no call date.

Effects of the currency reform already have been felt in western Germany. Black market prices are reported to have dropped as much as 90 per cent and some even below the legal level. A conservative estimate of currency circulating in the west before the reform has been set at 22 billion Reichsmark. The immediate circulation of Deutsche Mark has been estimated at 5 billion, or one-half the maximum authorized. Current and savings deposits in banks are estimated at 9 billion new marks, half of which are blocked.

Currency circulation in western Germany at the end of 1938 was about 6 billion Reichsmark and bank deposits totaled some 27 billion.

Economic activity in western Germany now is estimated at about 50 per cent of normal, chargeable chiefly to low labor efficiency. Thus, while the amount of cash in circulation is considered adequate, a tight money market is foreseen unless demand deposits are greatly increased by some such device as accelerated bank loans to individuals and industry supported by credits from central state banks.

Reds Got 1 for 1

IN THE RUSSIAN zone, currency reform has taken this form: The conversion factor is 10 to 1 but holders of old marks get 70 new marks at once instead of 60 as in the western zone. Savings deposits were converted at 1 to 1 for the first 100 marks and 5 to 1 up to 1000. Accounts of public agencies, including the Soviet authorities and organizations affiliated with the Communist-dominated Socialist Unity Party, were converted at 1 to 1.

Instead of printing new currency, stamps were affixed to old notes. There is no indication of a tax reform. War profits and profits of "Fascists" were confiscated.

Whereas in the western zone the occupation authorities got considerably less than their former share of money in circulation, the Russians and their associates got much more. That would appear to be of small moment, since they could take whatever they wanted anyway, without the guise of currency reform.

As seen here, the only real danger in the western Allies' system of currency reform is this:

If the Germans feel it will prevent or defer ultimate unity of western and eastern Germany, it might well result in a depressing rather than a stimulating effect on them and their economy. That, however, is a riddle only time can solve.

Berlin Can Be 'Lifted' Through Winter

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

FRANKFURT, July 24.—Germany's besieged former capital can survive the winter, supplied by the American-British pipeline—but it'll be a tough pull.

Some firm estimates of the city's needs, and what the airlift can do, have been completed by Gen. Lucius Clay's staff. They point up the fact that if the Russian blockade continues until spring, Operation Vittles must be expanded substantially or Berliners will suffer.

The record to date is a notable demonstration of what air power—as developed by the United States and Britain—can do. Supplying a city of 2¼ millions entirely by air is quite a job—one never before undertaken. It is terribly uneconomical, of course.

Weather, limited air space, a shortage of landing fields and lack of the right type airplanes make the project difficult and costly. But as a military operation it is by no means beyond the air potentialities of the Western powers for an indefinite period.

Needs Estimate Short

LATEST estimates of the needs of the western sector of Berlin show that about 4400 tons of supplies must be flown in daily through the winter to feed the people and carry on essential services. This includes 3000 tons of coal and allows for very little heating of homes. At present the Americans are bringing in 1500 tons daily and the British close to 1000 tons.

But the gap actually is greater than that. Official estimates of needs are listed in long tons and daily input in standard tons. Also, the former do not include packaging. Actually, about 5000 standard tons in all are required daily.

There are other factors. If the winter is severe, there will be days at a time when no flying is possible. That means that deliveries on good days must be stepped up greatly to maintain the average.

Officials say coal consumption can be cut in half by "strict austerity." This means very little electricity for lighting, probably some curtailment of gas for cooking, maintenance of the water supply, sewage system, hospitals, bakeries, etc., and the rock bottom minimum of "space heating." It's a grim prospect.

The American Air Force is now bringing in 650 tons of food a day for the German people and the British 450 tons. In addition, we are hauling 25 tons a day of supplies for American soldiers, civilians and dependents, a like amount for the French and 50 tons of asphalt and steel matting for the new runway at Tempelhof Airdrome.

Flour Is Main Item

THE emphasis is on concentrated foods for the Germans. The small imports for the western Allies are less limited. The German ration is 65 per cent flour, 15 per cent dehydrated potatoes, 6 per cent canned meat, fish or dried eggs, plus fats, dried milk, ersatz coffee, salt and cereals.

While some of the food comes from the United States, this is normal. Most of comes from the German economy—either home grown or imported in the regular way. Nor will Berlin mean any additional cost to the American taxpayer except for the flying operations. According to Col. Arthur V. Winton of Waukesha, Wis., handling the European Command end of the airlift, the food provided will not entail an increase in American appropriations for relief in Germany.

Continuation of the blockade soon will raise the unemployment rate in western Berlin—until recently almost nonexistent—to 90 per cent. WPA-type work programs to clean up bomb damage are planned. This is a job which must be done sooner or later. Military Government officials say the cost of the made-work program will come out of the German economy, not the United States Treasury.

DPs Ferried Out

TO cut down the number of mouths to feed, planes now are taking out 5000 DPs on return trips. Under consideration is the evacuation of American, British and French dependents and civil employes. While this would have some effect and would assure them safety, the Communist newspapers would exploit it as the first step in the withdrawal of the west.

If the dependents stay, they'll have to "take it" like the Germans, officials say. Already the shipment of liquor by airlift has been banned, although some may be brought in by commercial airlines. Government transportation has been pooled, one of the two Army commissaries has been closed and the gas ration has been cut to 5 gallons a month. Plans call for the use of two British tanker planes to haul 20 tons of fuel a day.

These are important steps, for the morale of the German people must be maintained if the siege lasts through the winter.

If the airlift is to be expanded and continued indefinitely, what must be done? For one thing, the 110 C-47s now in use must be replaced by C-54s—which carry three times as much—or other large planes such as C-82 Boxcars. More flight and ground crews will have to be sent from home, as the present seven-day week cannot continue very long.

Additional radio flying aids also are required, and probably another airfield will have to be built. Consideration is being given to Bremen as a substitute for Weisbaden as one American base of operations. Thought also has been given to using bombers in the airlift. The British may do this, and so may we, as a last resort.

No Smaller Ones

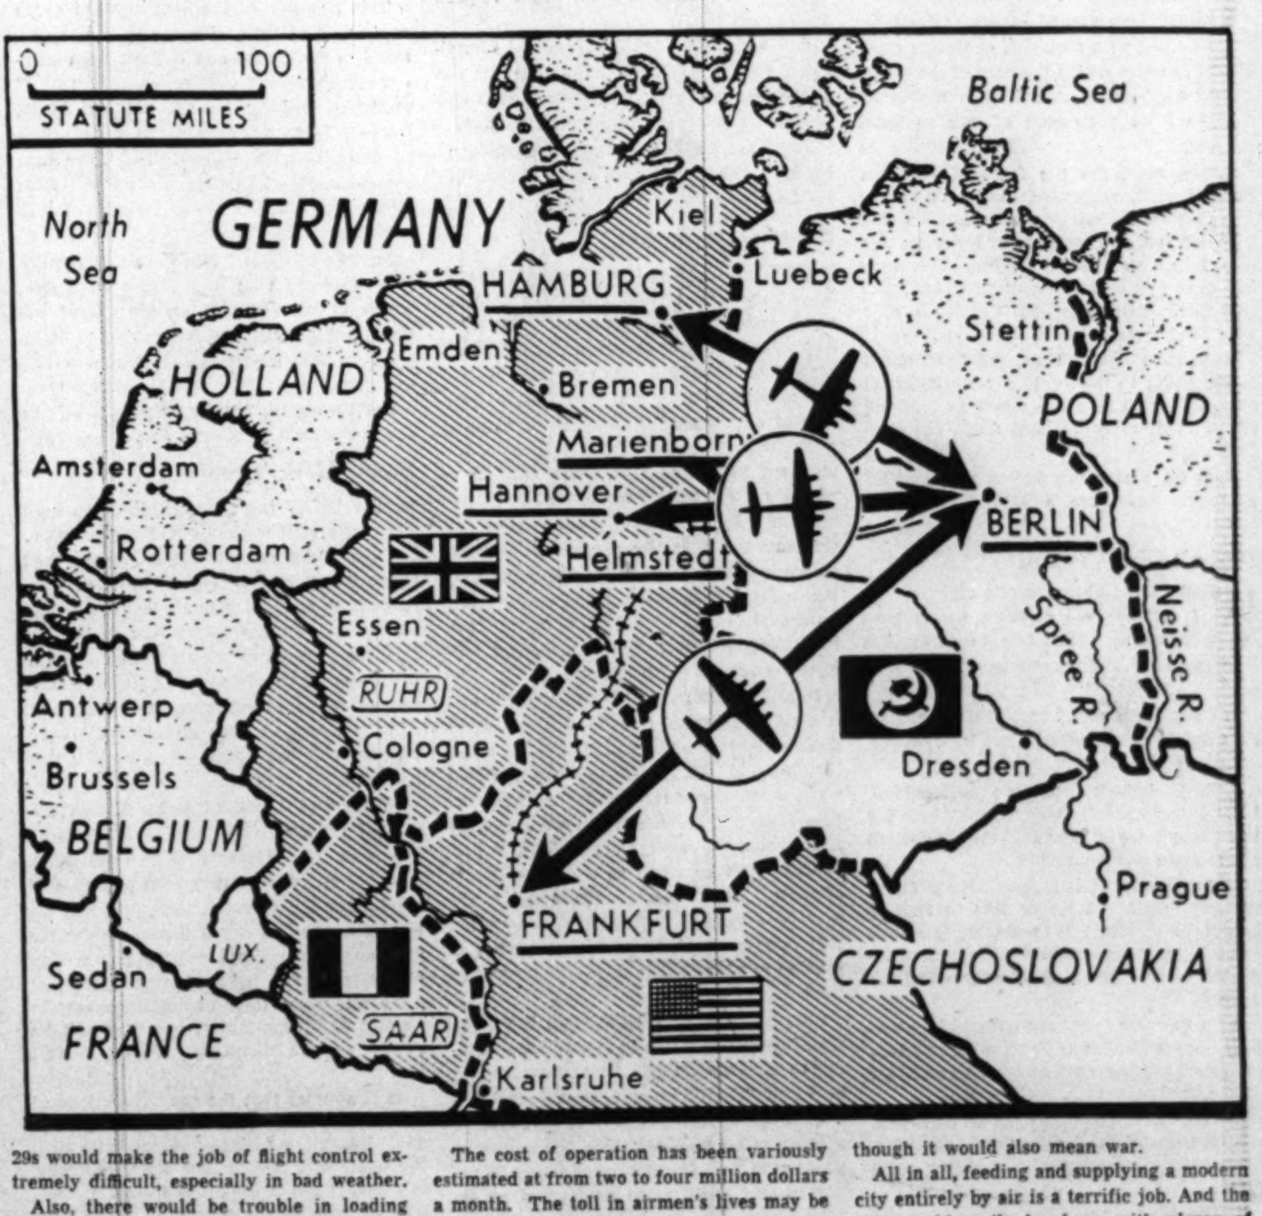
THe trouble is, we only have B-29s available. The wartime B-17s and B-24s have been sold, scrapped or converted to special mission work. By extending the British airfield, the big Superforts could land to discharge cargoes. Or they could drop coal bags from their bomb bays at a 100-foot altitude.

Their use either way would bring added headaches, however. The high speed of B-29s would make the job of flight control extremely difficult, especially in bad weather.

Also, there would be trouble in loading and unloading. Coal dust might harm the bomb-release mechanism. But it could be done.

The cost of operation has been variously estimated at from two to four million dollars a month. The toll in airmen's lives may be high, due to the law of averages and winter weather. Russian interference—only heckling, so far—would boost the accident rate, though it would also mean war.

All in all, feeding and supplying a modern city entirely by air is a terrific job. And the task could easily be done, with plenty of everything, by 16 trains moving overland to Berlin each day.



It Takes Leg Work to See Markos

Homer Bigart is the first American newspapermen to interview General Markos, chief of the Greek guerilla forces. Here is the first of a series of stories telling of Bigart's perilous trip across the Yugoslavian border into the rebel-held area of Greece.

By Homer Bigart

WITH General Markos in the Grammos Mountains, July 1 (delayed). The story of my search for General Markos, leader of the Greek rebel forces, begins in the Hotel Moskva, Belgrade, on the evening of June 13. Returning from dinner, I was told by the night clerk that a stranger had called and left word that he would return at 11 p. m. with a package for me.

Promptly at 11 there was a knock at the door. A young man of perhaps 20 pushed past me. Without a word he walked across the room, fell into a chair and beckoned me to an opposite seat.

"Comrade," he began (my exchange of letters with Dwight Griswold, chief of the American Aid Mission to Greece, had given me a local reputation as a "progressive journalist"). "Comrade, you had planned to return to Athens via Rome. Instead you will go via Free Greece and interview General Markos. Is that agreeable?"

Very tentatively, I said yes. Any Balkan correspondent would have given his right arm to see Markos.

I told the visitor to go on, but his English was so limited I could grasp little of what he said. After fruitless consultation with a pocket dictionary, he gave up and promised to return next morning with a comrade who knew English. Meanwhile I must employ the strictest "konspiratsia"—that favorite Balkan term for secrecy. "Speak not this to Yugoslavs," said the "comrade," emphatically pressing a finger to his lips.

Anywhere else, this behavior would have been comic, and even in the Balkans I found it hard to swallow his injunction against mentioning the matter to Yugoslav acquaintances. For, although the practical support Yugoslavia gave Markos has been exaggerated by the West, I failed to understand why Markos agents could not escort me across the frontier with a wink at the security police.

Next morning he returned bringing with him a tall, stocky, studious-looking youth who wore glasses and whose plump face was beaded with nervous sweat. His name was John, and he was going to accompany me on the long journey.

His English was not appreciably better, but, apart from the language difficulty, he was to prove an excellent guide, patient, tireless and unfailingly good-humored. He was so devastatingly moral that after a week of him our friendship at times wore a trifle thin.

At our first meeting, he was vague on important details. How was I to cross the forbidden frontier zone of the Macedonian People's Republic? He would take care of that. How long would the journey be? One week, two weeks, stay as long as you like. But wouldn't the Yugoslavs be sore? . . . I meant to return shortly to Belgrade and couldn't risk having my visa revoked. All John said was, "You want to see Markos, don't you?"

Next day he was back and konspiratsia thickened. Since my exit visa read via rail to Trieste, he told me I would have to buy a ticket to Rome on the Simplon Express and obtain an Italian visa—just to make my departure look legitimate. John was to phone the Moskva next morning and I was to say simply, "I am ready," if things were in order.

A misunderstanding arising from too vague konspiratsia nearly wrecked our plan on the day of departure. Eleven o'clock was zero hour and I had understood it meant 11 a. m., so I checked out of my room and was waiting in the empty lobby with haversack and typewriter. John came in looking scared. He grabbed me by the arm and pulled me into the street, and we walked a block before he muttered, "Not now, tonight."

He showed me a street corner where the rendezvous was to be made, and I went back to the hotel and hid for the rest of the day in the room of Osgood Carruthers, Associated Press correspondent, who was in Vienna.

Guys Named John

AS THE HOUR approached I became increasingly nervous. I knew next to nothing of the agents who were arranging this adventure. When I questioned their identity, they replied: "We could show you all kinds of papers and they would mean nothing to you. You'll just have to take your chance with us."

At 10 minutes of 11 I slipped through the lobby, having the good fortune not to encounter anyone, and walked to the appointed corner. John hurried up, whispered, "Don't talk," and led me through back alleys to the station.

We avoided the station, passing instead through the gloom of a freight yard and scrambling across tracks to where a darkened train was waiting. I saw from the destination sign on the coach that it was the midnight express for Skoplje, capital of Macedonia. It was crowded with tired soldiers and peasants, but John took me to an empty compartment marked, "Reserved for invalids." It stank of garlic and soiled plush. He told me to lie on the seat. Until we reached Skoplje I was to play invalid.

I slept a little, waking once to an altercation John was having with a Yugoslav officer who couldn't understand why I should sprawl over three seats while he, a representative of the people's security, had to stand in the aisle. John pointed to the sign on the door, I emitted a convincing groan, and the officer departed grumbling.

Reaching Skopleme next afternoon, we eluded ticket takers by passing through a side door and hurried to an adjacent parking space, where a battered UNRRA truck covered with a tarpaulin was waiting. Two men in the cab motioned me to climb in the back, the tarpaulin was lowered and tied, and I sat in steamy darkness on a pile of cushions while we jolted down the rough road toward Greece.

A Change of Clothing

AT DUSK the truck halted. We waited for darkness, then dismounted. I looked around and saw in the moonlight the black outline of mountains on every side. Below us to the east were the twinkling lights of a town I assumed was Djevdjelia. There were vineyards all about and the pine-scented mountain air was good after the stench of the train and petrol fumes of the truck.

We crossed a field. From the shadow of bushes stepped three men, their silhouettes bulky with slung rifles, blankets and overcoats. I wondered at all this paraphernalia, for the night was warm. Later I was to learn through extreme discomfort how essential it is to carry heavy clothing in the Greek mountains. I was deplorably equipped with a business suit and two pairs of low shoes.

A Greek girl guerilla captured in the Macedonian area where Bigart finally met General Markos, slumps dejectedly in a truck as she is hauled away for detention. The wounded guerilla on the stretcher at left died during the trip

John made whispered introductions, hands were shaken all around, and off we set single file up a valley. I was warned that we still were in Yugoslavia—would be for three more hours. No talking or smoking. We must move quickly for the night was short, and it was necessary to be well inside Greece by daybreak.

For a while we followed the silver ribbon of a stream. The trail, now rising sharply, showed evidence of considerable horse traffic. In a few moments we found it was heavily patrolled by mounted Yugoslav frontier guards. Twice we had to duck behind bushes on hearing horses approach. The second time we were nearly caught.

Uncomfortable Hideout

THE WOODS had thinned out and we had emerged breathless on a scrubby plateau. The patrol was upon us so quickly there was no time to select cover. I fell behind the nearest rock and heard the soft scuffing of gravel as the others hid themselves.

Four soldiers rode up. We had a sickening sensation as they paused, looked around and talked quietly among themselves. They had not seen us—there was no tension in their voices. Finally, after interminable minutes in which sharp pieces of rock gouged my stomach, they rode on.

With the moon almost perpendicularly above us, we crossed the plateau. The trail zigzagged up the rocky flank of a mountain, dropped several hundred feet, then rose dizzily again. I looked at my watch—it was only midnight and already I was so tired I could hardly see. It was a combination of fear and exhaustion such as I had not experienced since the amphibious landings during the war.

We climbed for another hour. Suddenly we left the trail and, crossing an upland meadow dotted with dwarf pine, entered an oak forest on the other side.

There we found another trail and, in a little while, a spring where we drank and rested.

Thus, at 2 o'clock in the morning of June 17, we entered rebel Greece.

Mr. Bigart's story will be continued in The Washington Post Monday.

Tories Join Steel to 'Save Capitalism'

By Jack Tait

LONDON, July 24.—British elections have pivoted on many single clear-cut issues. In the last hundred years or so there have been parliamentary reform, corn laws, Irish home rule, protection versus free trade, House of Lords and so on.

A similar great issue is shaping up for the next general election, which probably will be held in 1950. Socialism is preparing to take over the citadel of British capitalism—the iron and steel industry.

It is expected that a few months before the 1950 election the Labor government will win final passage of its legislation placing iron and steel under public ownership. Labor has the majority in the House of Commons to push the measure through.

Whether Labor then will begin to administer the industry will rest upon the decision of the electorate. When the proposal for nationalization of iron and steel was put to the people in 1945 by Labor Party candidates, the people voted in its favor. Do they still feel the same way?

Capitalism's Citadel

CONSERVATIVE Party leaders, guided by Winston Churchill, are mapping a fierce fight in defense of iron and steel. They are fired by the belief that British capitalism may be making a last stand. For with socialism in control of steel, the Tories reason, what remains for capitalism? Textiles? Chemicals? Tobacco?

These industries and others at least for a time. But with socialism operating steel, it will be approaching the core of the metal, heavy engineering and vehicle trades by virtue of its possession of raw material sources.

These, then, are the fears of business. Labor government nationalization up to now has involved primarily public utilities and so-called service groupings of industry. The coal mines were an exception. But they had been operated so inefficiently for years that their nationalization met with only mild disapproval.

Now, for the first time, the government is preparing to take over a manufacturing industry—from iron ore mines to finishing plant. This move has laid down the challenge.

Both sides have marshalled abundant arguments. Some are hollow. Some make sense.

Daren't Give Ground

HERE IS the government's case:

1. In the 1945 election, voters gave the government a mandate to nationalize iron and steel. The mandate must be honored.

2. Once the Socialist revolution stagnates, it is finished. Socialism must be dynamic, or it will wither away.

3. Steel industrialists are self-seeking. They do not operate their industries, as the government would, for the overall benefit of the state and community.

4. These industrialists have been guilty of banding together more or less to restrict output to maintain high prices, thus ballooning production costs for the rest of industry with a resulting adverse effect on exports.

5. In the past they have entered into cartel arrangements with European producers to safeguard their domestic market and that in the Commonwealth.

6. They have computed production costs on the basis of the least efficient manufacturers, thus bringing about higher steel prices.

7. The five-year plan for modernizing the industry, submitted to the government at its request by the steel operators, was shortsighted in its production target, and even then depended on heavy government financial support.

8. It would be just as well if an industry so closely related to armament production were under public control and ownership.

Heedless Warfare

HERE IS the operators' case:

1. The government has gone nationalization mad. It is practicing socialism for socialism's sake. It is intent on carrying on the war with capitalism rather than seeking to do that which is best for the nation.

2. The government should pay more attention to operating industries already nationalized. It should see them efficient and solvent before attempting to absorb anything so highly complicated as iron and steel.

3. Steel is currently setting production records, while certain nationalized industries are lagging behind output targets and operating in the red.

4. Nationalization would upset the present smooth-working scheme of steel production and would mean only one thing—less steel.

5. The government already possesses a substantial degree of control over the industry and its prices. If the government so desires, these controls may be tightened, with approval of the operators, to safeguard every public interest that might require such protection.

6. The industry is so diverse and complicated that it would be impossible for the government to determine where to start and stop in formulating a nationalization plan.

These are among the arguments employed by each side. But two stand out as the most weighty and most effective.

Sin of Overcaution

FIRST, THERE is the government's criticism of the steel industry's replacement and expansion program. The plan, submitted by the British Iron and Steel Federation in May, 1946, was estimated to cost 168 million pounds, and would have been carried out by stages up to 1953. Annual production at the end of this period was put at about 16 million tons, three millions of which was earmarked for export.

From the government's point of view, the sin here was that the planned output for domestic consumption in the 1950s was only 1½ million tons more than was actually consumed in Britain in 1937. Furthermore, the export estimate was only 500,000 tons over the prewar export figure.

In the words of the plan itself: "Although it must be assumed that fluctuations below a high level of employment will be much less than in the period between the two wars, some allowance should be made for this factor. Provided fluctuations can be kept within narrow limits, possibly 15,500,000 tons can be taken as a close estimate of normal requirements. While this figure may be exceeded, particularly in a period still farther ahead, it would not seem reasonable to plan at this stage on any higher basis."

Supporters of nationalization labeled the plan ridiculous. With the government working to increase exports by at least 75 per cent over the 1938 average, annual steel output up to 20 million tons or even more seemed to be required; also, with German production well below prewar levels, it appeared that much more steel could be exported.

So the federation's plan is being employed as ammunition by the government. It is described as shortsighted and overly conservative. Prof. G. D. H. Cole wrote, in a recent pamphlet entitled, "Why Nationalize Steel?" "In effect, they (the federation) were asking the government to stand behind them in carrying through a plan designed, not to give the nation the steel it needs, but to entrench their existing monopoly."

Bullseye Every Time

ON THE OTHER side, the steel industry has an ace to play. Its June production was the highest for any month in the history of the industry. Output has been steadily climbing in the last year or two, and the production curve has been rising much more steeply than with nationalized coal.

June's output of steel was at the annual rate of 15,000,444 tons, compared with 15,283,000 in April and 13,206,000 in June last year. Each time the government sets a target for the industry, it is promptly exceeded.

With billboards throughout the country carrying government pleas for more production, and the privately owned steel industry breaking output records, the operators are presented with a formidable weapon. They have no need to issue a flood of statements defending their position against nationalization. Each month they merely hand out production figures. The Conservative press makes the proper interpretation.

This strategy of the industry has given supporters of nationalization little new material to work with and has not been without effect on the British cabinet. "Go slow" ministers, led by Labor's political brain, Herbert Morrison, have found some solace in steel production figures. They have been able to stave off the fire-eaters like Health Minister Aneurin Bevan and win a delay in nationalization of steel.

But the "go slow" ministers will require the cooperation of the House of Lords, which seems virtually certain. Steel nationalization legislation is expected to be introduced into the House of Commons late this year. The peers will almost certainly reject the measure, thus keeping it off the law books until 1950.

Better Mark Time

NOW THAT the time schedule has been pretty well worked out, there seems to be less disagreement within the cabinet about the measure. The majority of ministers is agreed that it would be more politic merely to pass the nationalization law before the general election without stepping in to operate the industry. Because should something go wrong with the government administration of iron and steel just before the election, Labor would be in a ticklish political position.

Minister of Supply George Strauss has worked out the broad outline of the iron and steel bill. Under it, it is understood, a central board, with very wide powers, will administer the industry. All principal activities of the industry will come under the government plan, from iron mines to rolling processes. It is believed that individual firms will retain their names and a certain amount of independence, but they will be bound by the directives of the central board.

So it appears that the government's steel nationalization plan is to be an ambitious one. There is no hint of compromise with the operators. Labor, one must conclude, is intent upon calling the tune for 1950. And at this time it looks as if it would be iron and steel.

The Gallup Poll

Civil Rights Ideas Differ Over Nation

By George Gallup

Director American Institute of Public Opinion

WIDE differences of public opinion exist on the four major proposals of the Truman civil rights program, which is almost certain to be an important issue confronting this special session of Congress.

The Institute has surveyed a national cross-section on the proposals for a Federal anti-lynch law, abolition of poll taxes, a Federal fair employment practices law (FEPC) and prohibition of segregation in interstate travel.

Of the four proposals, the one which Southern voters oppose most overwhelmingly is the prohibition of segregation on trains and buses

The South as a whole actually approves doing away with poll taxes, although a majority of voters in the seven States still collecting the taxes wants them retained.

The rest of the country, on the other hand, approves the proposals for a Federal antilynch law, abolition of both poll taxes and travel segregation, and is about evenly divided on a national FEPC.

The above analysis of voter opinion is based on the following series of questions asked by the Institute:

"Do you think Negroes should or should not be required to occupy a separate part of a train or bus when traveling from one State to another?"

Wallace's 'New' Party Teems With Old Faces

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

PHILADELPHIA, July 24 —The strangest political convention in the history of the United States comes to an end here tomorrow.

Henry Agard Wallace of Iowa is now the duly nominated Presidential candidate of the Progressive Party (the "New Party" label persists), and Senator Glen Taylor, the singing cowboy from Idaho, is his official Vice Presidential running mate.

At the very start the convention couldn't help but seem a topsy-turvy affair.

The two candidates, supposedly to be nominated here by delegates from all over the country, had accepted weeks before the convention opened.

Another factor played a part in the upside-down, mirror-writing atmosphere of the founding convention.

Normally a political party adopts its platform first, and then nominates the candidates to run on it. Here the Progressive Party reversed the usual order and officially picked its candidates and then arranged to adopt its platform.

The So-Long-Ago

BUT odd as these little Alice-in-Wonderland touches were, they faded into insignificance beside another aspect.

This convention actually was an echo—an eerie, uncanny echo—coming back through time from a period seven to eight years ago.

And to touch the edges of relativity a little, that seven or eight years ago is very, very far away. Since then the man of the world has been changed. World War II, and all the complex, apparently unending chain of events it helped to set in motion, have intervened.

But to get the full picture of just what happened in Philadelphia, it is necessary to recollect a little.

In August, 1939, two dictators, Adolf Hitler and Josef Stalin, had signed a nonaggression pact. By 1940, part of the world was in flames.

In the United States, an aroused Government, under President Franklin D. Roosevelt, was taking steps in the opposite direction—lend-lease to Britain, destroyers to Britain. The American Communist Party rushed to the defense of its fatherland.

An Emergency Peace Mobilization was called in Chicago over Labor Day weekend in 1940. The bones of the old American League Against War and Fascism—formed when Russia feared an attack by Hitler—and the American League for Peace and Democracy were the skeletons on which the new organization was built.

Despite efforts at concealment, it soon became clear that the Emergency Peace Mobilization was a front for the Communist Party.

Its primary purpose, according to its own literature, was to "keep out of war."

Out of this organization evolved the American Peace Mobilization, which has been fairly described as "one of the most notorious and blatantly Communist fronts ever organized in this country."

The period of its existence coincided exactly with the period of the Stalin-Hitler pact.

APM pickets were withdrawn from in front of the White House a bare 12 hours before Hitler marched on Russia, June 22, 1941.

Cast Is Unchanged

NOW, only a few years later, relations between this Nation and the Soviet Union are strained. And once again there comes an organized movement for peace, which the American Communists say they are backing and which refuses to repudiate their support.

This time it's called a political party, but there are many familiar faces and familiar techniques to bring back that echo.

One of the most impassioned orators at a big New York mass meeting of the American Peace Mobilization on April 5, 1941, was Representative Vito Marcantonio of New York, undeviating follower of the Communist Party line. He was here again in Philadelphia, this time as chairman of the rules committee of the Progressive Party.

The magnificent voice of Paul Robeson, Negro singer who has called Moscow his spiritual home, was raised in song seven years ago to spur on APM. Robeson was cochairman of the Wallace for President Committee. He was vice chairman of AMP, too.

On the rules committee with Marcantonio is Donald Henderson, president of the United Food and Tobacco and Agricultural Workers of America, CIO. Henderson, according to the Daily Worker of September 3, 1940, was a member of the national committee for the Emergency Peace Mobilization.

On the platform committee was a number of APM veterans. There is Harry Bridges —what applause he received at a meeting in Mecca Temple seven years ago for his last-ditch opposition to America's preparedness.

Grant Oakes, president of the United Farm Equipment and Machinery Workers of America, CIO, is another. The Progressive Party candidate for Governor of Illinois, Oakes was an APM vice chairman.

The Cultural Crowd

LILLIAN Hellman, the playwright, who was one of the major lights of the American Peace Mobilization, turned up in Philadelphia on the platform committee also.

Miss Hellman, by the way, really is a veteran at this sort of thing. She was a sponsor of the American League for Peace and Democracy back in 1939.

Among those billed as convention "personalities" is Donald Ogden Stewart, novelist and movie script writer. Stewart was a permanent officer of APM.

On the arrangements committee for the convention is Herman Schumlin, New York theatrical producer, who played an important role in arrangements for the American Peace Mobilization.

Reid Robinson, vice president of United Mine and Smelter Workers of America, CIO, is another convention personality who was a vice chairman of APM.

This list could be very considerably expanded if time and space permitted. But as it stands it should be sufficient to show that the Progressive Party has considerable appeal to those to whom APM appealed also.

Even the general air of the Progressive Party convention was highly reminiscent of an APM rally.

It was called "a singing convention" by its sponsors and participants. Leading the singing when the convention opened Friday night was Earl Robinson, author of "Ballad for Americans." Coincidentally or otherwise, Robinson, a permanent officer of the American Peace Mobilization (Daily Worker, September 3, 1940), also led APM delegates in singing.

That was when APM'ers were singing, "Franklin, Oh, Franklin, we don't want to go to war." They were also singing:

"Remember when the AAA killed a million hogs a day? Instead of hogs, it's men today. Plow the fourth one under."

Even in slogans, the Progressive Party apes the old APM. In 1941 APM songs were lambasting J. P. Morgan, Republic Steel and the Duponts. Today the Progressive Party harps on the House of Morgan and Dupont with Dillon Read thrown in.

Unification's in Action, Although It's Not Yet in Uniform

By Elton Fay

DEFENSE SECRETARY James Forrestal says he never did think it would be easy to make the armed forces unification program work. And it hasn't been.

A year ago, on July 26, 1947, Congress finally compromised on many long and bitter arguments and passed a law to provide for the Army, Navy and Air Force "authoritative coordination and unified direction under civilian control, but not to merge them."

Each service was given equal status and the right of appeal to the President should it disagree with the others. The National Military Establishment was set up as directing agency.

There have been two really major arguments between the services since the law became operative—and it was not the President but Congress that settled them. Both involved the Air Force.

Forrestal, until then Navy Secretary, became Secretary of Defense on September 17, 1947. He said then it would take several years for unification to work.

Mostly Planning

WHAT has been done in the past year has to a considerable degree been spadework. "Directing agencies" have been established under NME to carry out the details of unification, but a great deal of the effort has been planning what the agencies will do when the program really begins to roll.

There has been no saving in Federal expenditures. This has surprised no one. It costs money to establish a brand-new agency, and so far the cost of defense has increased. It is hoped savings may come later through central purchasing, etc.

Compromise has been the keynote. Indeed, Forrestal's appointment was itself a compromise.

Backing the unification demands of the Air Force and Army against the hostility of the Navy, President Truman finally won over the admirals by promising to appoint the Navy Secretary to head the unified establishment.

The policy of compromise has been followed into many details. If an Air Force general has been appointed director of an operating agency, for example, his deputy has been an Army or Navy man.

Councils of War

WHAT has been done? Here are some of the things:

1. Two agencies to work with NME have been created—the National Security Council and the National Security Resources Board. They are responsible to the President.

The job of the council is to see to it that the Nation can back up with force the position taken by its diplomats. The duty of the resources board is to advise the President, the council and the military establishment what they can count on in the way of industrial, civilian and military mobilization of materials and manpower.

2. A War Council has been set up—composed of the Secretaries of Defense, Army, Navy and Air and the Chiefs of Staff of the three services. The name of this agency is a little more sinister than its routine job, which is to ponder day-to-day NME operations.

3. The Joint Chiefs of Staff, established early in 1942, was carried on. Carried on with it were some of the controversies that persisted all through the war years among the three services. We will talk more about that later.

4. The Research and Development Board has been operating since December. Its work, much of it secret, is directed at arming the fighting services with weapons adequate for atomic and rocket age warfare. But it is giving attention also to improving existing weapons and techniques.

5. The Munitions Board within recent weeks began distributing to manufacturers a guide book. It gives them an idea of what the military will need in equipment in event of a war, the Government agency they should contact and some inkling of the Government's ideas on allocation of materials.

In this connection, initial steps toward an eventual saving have been taken in creating a single-agency buying program. One service procures equipment or material for all services. Forrestal recently claimed that "only 16 per cent of the dollar volume . . . is involved in uncoordinated procurement activities."

6. The Air Force's Air Transport Command and the Navy's Naval Air Transport Service have been merged into a "Military Air Transport Service." Forrestal also is attempting some elimination of duplicating services in the medical field.

7. A civil defense planning group is attempting to find out what the country should have to cope with a future invasion or air attack. At the moment the thought is to draw up only a very broad set of plans and leave details to States and cities.

8. On July 1 NME started preparing the first joint appropriation request to cover all three of the armed forces. It was this budget estimate that to a considerable degree precipitated the sharp argument over the Air Force this spring.

The 55-70 Squabble

FORRESTAL recommended that the Air Force be given 55 groups of warplanes, whereas the Air Force had said it felt 70 were necessary.

He made several points in support of the recommendation: (1) It would keep the Air Force in balance with the present Army and Navy; (2) buying more planes might contribute to inflation, and (3) at some point in expansion of our military might some foreign powers might consider we were taking on offensive strength.

The Air Force soon after the war had stated its belief that 70 groups of planes were required for defense and to make immediate retaliatory strikes should this Nation be attacked. It went along with plans for a smaller force for two years when economy was a major factor, but it did not abandon the ultimate 70-group goal.

Meanwhile, Congress was confronted with proposals for a universal military training program and a renewed selective service system. Traditionally never enthusiastic about compelling constituents to go into military service, especially in an election year, Congress displayed the keenest interest in the 70-group Air Force program. It was the old, old hope of fighting a war with more machines and fewer men.

Congress approved a 70-group Air Force. Forrestal explained that he did not contend that the air arm should not be expanded to such size eventually, but that if it was done the Army and Navy should be expanded to keep pace.

Congress did that.

Then there was the Air Force's quarrel with the Navy. This conflict runs back into wartime days. The heart of the argument always was whether the Navy should be allowed to bomb strategic targets as well as to operate carrier-based planes in purely naval campaigns.

Navy's Limitations

LAST March Forrestal took the Joint Chiefs of Staff down to the Key West, Fla., naval base for a three-day huddle. He came back with a paper which, among other things, said:

1. The Air Force is responsible for strategic air warfare, the systematic application of air power to selected vital targets, designed to destroy an enemy's war-making capacity.

2. The Navy is to conduct air operations "as necessary for the accomplishment of a naval campaign," for the purpose of "gaining, extending or maintaining control of the sea."

In a statement, Forrestal made a couple of other points:

3. The Navy would not be prohibited from attacking any targets necessary for the accomplishment of its mission.

4. The Navy would not build a large carrier on the basis of its contribution to strategic air warfare alone.

It wasn't long before this last question came up anyway.

Congress voted funds to start work on a 65,000-ton carrier which could launch and recover big bombing planes. Admiral Louis A. Denfeld, Chief of Naval Operations, was reported to have testified to a congressional committee that all members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff approved the project.

Air Force authorities said later that Gen. Carl Spaatz, then Air Force Chief of Staff, had not approved the carrier idea.

The debate subsided, but was revived June 30 in an address by Rear Admiral Ralph A. Oftsie. Oftsie is Navy member of the Military Liaison Committee, the group forming contact between the military and the Atomic Energy Commission. He was quoted as saying that dropping of the atomic bomb must be a major consideration in the war plans of naval aviation.

Forrestal's office is known to have been somewhat startled. It hadn't had a preview of the speech, and Forrestal himself had ordered that all such controversial statements be submitted to his office before publication.

The Air Force also was startled, angry —but silent.

Air Secretary W. Stuart Symington, ever prominent in interservice rivalry, probably spoke the latest word on unification at Los Angeles a week ago, when he deplored "bickering and jockeying" among the services and said that no department store could get financing for a line of merchandise with so disjointed a program

Dangling Scientist to Copy 2500-Year-Old Inscription

THE SECRET of the "Rosetta Stone of Western Asia" may be divulged this fall when a University of Chicago archeologist, suspended 300 feet on a steel cable over Mount Behistun, will make the first complete copy of the 2500-year-old carved order of King Darius of Persia.

The archeological expedition to Iran, sponsored by the American Schools of Oriental Research and the University of Michigan, will be made by George G. Cameron, the foremost Elamitist of the time.

The inscription, and a relief portraying Barius and 10 of his enemies, are carved on the rocky wall of the Iranian mountain, 500 feet above the plain and 100 feet above a vertical wall.

The inscription, often compared with the Rosetta Stone by which modern man found the key to the decipherment of all cuneiform (wedge shaped) writing, has been examined twice before. The inadequacy of these copies, however, has long been known.

To the right of the relief of Darius are four inscribed columns which have neither been read nor copied. They were proclaimed illegible by Sir Henry Rawlinson, who attempted the first copying job 100 years ago.

Top Dixiecrat Has 'Southern Liberal' Views

By Henry Lesesne

COLUMBIA, S. C., July 24.—Although hardly an Ellis Arnall, Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, the States' rights candidate for President, was known as a liberal by all Southern standards before the civil rights controversy came along.

In his campaign two years ago, Thurmond eschewed all appeal to racial prejudice and was even accused by some of his opponents of being a Communist. In fact, his election was interpreted as confirming a long-felt suspicion that the Southern people are more advanced in their thinking than professional Southern politicians believe.

He is an anti-poll taxer. For two years he tried to get the South Carolina Legislature to repeal the State's poll tax, but unsuccessfully.

It should be said that in South Carolina the $1-a-year poll tax applies to the general election and not to the Democratic primary, which heretofore has been the only meaningful election. There are certain qualifications for voting in the general election, but almost any white man could enroll in the Democratic Party and vote in the all-important primary.

The 45-year-old Governor did get through this year's Legislature a bill he considered No. 1 on his program—to modernize the State government. It creates a commission which has broad powers to eliminate overlapping and duplication.

Prosecuted Lynch Mob

ALTHOUGH he has opposed Federal intervention in State affairs, even in lynching cases the Governor is a vigorous foe of lynching and the mob spirit. This was demonstrated a few months after he took office, when a mob of taxi drivers lynched Willie Earle in an upstate county.

The Governor sent members of his constabulary to aid in the investigation, and four days later, when 31 members of the mob had been rounded up, he announced: "We in South Carolina want the world to know we will tolerate no mob violence."

Thurmond instructed the Attorney General's office to assist the local prosecutor "to the limit," and although the jury acquitted the defendants, there was no criticism of the State's handling of the case.

For two years the Governor has strongly recommended to the Legislature the enactment of a secret voting law for South Carolina. This is the only State which does not have some semblance of secret ballot, and it is even impossible to vote a split ticket.

Each party prints its own ballot. In the last general election there were six different ballots for Federal office representing the candidates of six different parties or factions. The single ballot is regarded as a means of providing a chance for the development of a two-party system.

The Legislature balked, but at the State Democratic convention—in the only floor action that got beyond the control of the party leaders—the delegates strongly endorsed the Governor's recommendation.

Assailed 'Invasion'

THURMOND nevertheless, is Governor of a State which has deliberately tried for four years to circumvent the Texas case decision of the Supreme Court that Negroes must vote in the South's white Democratic primaries.

When the Supreme Court upheld a decision declaring South Carolina's "private club" primary unconstitutional, Thurmond criticized the ruling as an invasion of States' rights.

Thurmond is particularly bitter, on the same grounds, about the Truman proposal for a National Fair Employment Practices Act. He says it would mean an end to the Southern way of life.

Thurmond's program for South Carolina includes a new constitution to replace the wordy and outmoded one adopted in 1895. He has asked for a merit system for State employes and for "home rule" for the counties and municipalities. At present local affairs of each county are handled by the Legislature, which sits for several months each year.

The Governor got through the last Legislature a proposed constitutional amendment limiting the Governor's pardon and parole power to capital cases. This power has been notoriously abused in the past, but Thurmond has not issued one pardon or parole.

A Tillman Disciple

THE Governor comes from the rural county of Edgefield and learned the art of handshaking as a farm boy from the late Senator Benjamin Ryan (Pitchfork Ben) Tillman, who led the agarian movement in South Carolina.

Thurmond was an athlete at Clemson College. During vacations he worked in a cotton mill. Ever since finishing college he's been in public service—school teacher, school superintendent, State Senator and circuit judge. He resigned from the bench to run for Governor.

He has a large farm in his home county and owns the only hotel in Edgefield. He is a combat veteran of World War II, holding the rank of lieutenant colonel. He has 12 military medals, including the Purple Heart, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star, Belgian Cross of the Order of the Crown and the French Croix de Guerre.

Thurmond has shown an interest in education and advocated a permanent higher pay scale for teachers, which was passed in 1947. He favors Federal aid to education— provided the States control the spending of the money.

In November, 1947, the Governor hit the front pages when he was married to his pretty secretary, the former Jean Crouch. He was strongly urged by labor groups to run for the Senate this summer against Senator Burnet R. Maybank. He refused, saying he had been elected Governor and that he intended to serve the full four years.

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina acknowledges the ovation that followed his nomination for President at the Dixiecrat Conference at Birmingham

Home Rule Again

Enactment of the home-rule bill for the District of Columbia should, in our opinion, be one of the firm objectives of the extraordinary session of Congress. The House suspended debate on the measure near the end of May solely because of the pressure of other legislation. Now that pressure has been relieved. The House could well take up this "unfinished business" on the floor while committees give attention to the President's recommendations. Chairman Dirksen of the House District Committee has advanced some powerful arguments for following this course.

Aside from the urgency of covering the District back into our democratic system as a matter of principle, there is the very practical consideration of conserving time and energy. A vast amount of work has gone into the preparation of the proposed District charter embodied in the Auchincloss bill. This would be lost and it would be necessary to start afresh if action on the bill should be postponed until the 1949 session. To avoid a lengthy special session, the Republican leaders are determined to limit rather severely the scope of legislation to be considered. It does not follow, however, that the home-rule bill should be ruled out. Indeed, this is one of the constructive measures which Congress can accept without any embarrassment or any coercion from the White House, for it originated in Congress and, while it is not a partisan measure, it has advanced largely because of Republican backing.

The bill has been greatly strengthened, moreover, by a new plank in the Republican platform calling for "self-government for the residents of the Nation's Capital" and a reiteration of the Democratic plank favoring suffrage for the District. Both may be regarded as an indorsement of the home-rule bill. We take no stock in President Truman's argument that the Republican-controlled Congress is under obligation to put that party's campaign pledges into effect before the election. But here is a case in which the platform merely indorses a bill already well advanced toward enactment. Nothing would be lost and much would be gained by enacting the bill at the earliest feasible moment.

Another factor of compelling importance will be the presence of Representative Dirksen to lead the home-rule fight in the special session. Mr. Dirksen is to retire from Congress at the end of this year. In securing the rule which sent the bill to the floor and in fending off hostile attacks he proved to be a tower of strength. Certainly there is a great advantage in pressing the issue to a decision in the House while his captaincy of the forces behind the charter remains in effect. We cannot help thinking that these considerations in favor of putting the bill through at the special session far outweigh the argument for confinement of action to an arbitrarily-fixed number of emergency measures.

Within The Party

Senator A. Willis Robertson's decision to fight out the civil rights battle within rather than outside the Democratic Party undoubtedly was tempered by the fact that he is up for reelection. There is virtually no chance that a third party, let alone a fourth party, can succeed in Virginia. Indeed, the principal political contests in the Old Dominion are usually confined to the Democratic primaries. But Virginia did go Republican in the 1928 presidential election, and there are pockets of opposition in the State that could serve as the nucleus for another Republican victory if the Democrats were sufficiently divided. Mr. Robertson's announcement that he will support President Truman despite the civil rights platform thus may be construed as a timely effort to avoid splitting the Democratic vote.

This return to the fold is interesting principally because the Virginia politicians were among the first and loudest bolters from the Truman ranks. Senator Robertson had joined in that movement. Now his change of heart has the effect of putting Senator Byrd and Governor Tuck, the foremost proponents of separatism, on the spot. Senator Robertson's decision also evidences an independence worthy of encouragement. Sometimes he has been described as a carbon copy of Senator Byrd, a label that is both unfair and inaccurate. He is a conservative, but his voting record shows a number of significant departures from the stands taken by Senator Byrd—including, notably, an effort by Mr. Robertson to prevent the crippling of the European Recovery Program.

Aside from its immediate implications for his campaign, Senator Robertson's position reflects a healthy willingness to accept majority dictates in the two-party tradition. This should put an end to the talk of a separate Virginia convention and "free" electors who in effect could deny the vote of the people. Senator Byrd and Governor Tuck, who are not faced with an appeal to the electorate this year, have maintained a discreet silence on what course they will now follow on the civil rights rebellion. Political realities being what they are in Virginia, however, it would not be surprising to see them go sullenly back.

Book Clubs

In Harper's magazine recently, Mr. Merle Miller took up again the question whether the influence of the book clubs on American literature has been baneful or beneficent. Mr. Miller, after considering the matter in various aspects, left the question unanswered. He did, however, make two things pretty plain. One is that by and large the book clubs reflect rather than direct the popular taste. The other is that by their ingenious promotion methods the clubs have considerably enlarged the number of regular book-buyers in the United States. Nor can it be denied that the books chosen by the judging committees of the larger clubs have occasionally been works of more than ordinary merit.

The opposition to the book clubs comes mainly from the retail book sellers. It is based largely on the circumstance that the arrangements between publishers and the book clubs permit the clubs to distribute books to their subscribers at prices which in the aggregate are less than the wholesale cost of the same books to book sellers and less than half the cost to the retail purchaser. In the Publishers' Weekly for June 12, for example, Mr. Gilbert E. Goodkind wrote:

> The seriousness of this price differential, plus the myriad of "free" offers which come pouring forth, further complicated by the alternate selection problem, today constitutes one of the most serious and vexatious problems facing the retail trade.

Against this it is argued that the publicity given to any book chosen by one of the larger clubs usually stimulates the sale of the same book in retail shops. Nevertheless, there is evidence that the extensive and somewhat artificial popularizing of a few books each season serves steadily to narrow the range of choice open to those readers who prefer to make their own selections. This is especially true in smaller communities where booksellers operating on limited capital margins naturally stock only books that are certain to move. Thus retail booksellers now have elaborate services for advising them in advance which new books are most likely to be in demand. They have also been driven by the price differentials to organize what amounts to another book club. Their plan is to lease from publishers the plates of certain books chosen by a committee of booksellers and to distribute them under their own imprint. The plan, however, has met with no encouragement from the publishers. Mr. Goodkind said that:

> The replies we received . . . were for the most part indefinite. In a couple of instances there were absolute refusals. Suffice it to say we have received no galleys and no manuscripts.

The rising costs of production, especially of paper and printing, have of course obliged publishers to advance both the wholesale and retail prices of their books. This, too, has worked to the detriment of the retail trade and to the advantage of the clubs. What is more important it has also led to a considerable diminution of variety in the publishers' lists. The number of copies which now must be sold before the publication of a book can be considered a profitable investment is probably double what it was in 1939. Perhaps the number of book readers has also doubled through the influence of the clubs; but the character and in some cases the quality of a book for which the optimum sale anticipated is, say, 5000 copies, remains different from one with an optimum sale of 10,000 copies. Thus there is reason to believe that in book publishing as in other business the progressive expansion of the market leads to an inevitable standardization of the product.

Citizenship Restored

During the war, some 5300 American citizens of Japanese ancestry renounced their citizenship under the terms of a law passed by Congress in 1944 for the specific purpose of enabling them to do so. Subsequently about 2300 of them sought to rescind their renunciations on the ground that they had acted under duress. Federal District Judge Louis E. Goodman of California has concluded that the renunciations of most of the plaintiffs should never have been accepted and are therefore invalid. He ruled that the renunciants remain citizens of the United States. His decision is a momentous act of restitution, amending an error committed in the excitement of wartime and pointing a lesson to all who would palter, for any reason whatever, with the constitutional guarantees of individual rights.

The history of this country's treatment of its West Coast citizens of Japanese descent is a shameful one. Although they were guilty of no disloyal act and had violated no law of the land, they were forced to leave their homes and were imprisoned without trial in concentration camps euphemistically called relocation centers. When the Supreme Court ruled in the Endo case that those whose loyalty was admitted could no longer be detained, the Government hit upon the expedient of authorizing voluntary renunciation of citizenship so that the renunciants could then be interned as enemy aliens. The expedient was applied to persons who had been segregated at the Tule Lake camp because they had refused or failed to sign certain loyalty affidavits. "It is shocking to the conscience," declared Judge Goodman, "that an American citizen be confined without authority and then, while so under duress and restraint, for his Government to accept from him a surrender of his constitutional heritage."

Duress need involve no direct menace. John L. Burling, the Department of Justice official in charge of the renunciation hearings, took great pains to make sure that renunciation was not coerced in any way by the militant groups of pro-Japanese aliens living in the Tule Lake center. Judge Goodman characterized an affidavit submitted by Mr. Burling in connection with the rescinding pleas as a fair, temperate and dispassionate statement of the circumstances backgrounding the renunciations. The affidavit declared:

> It is also true, as has been stated, that most of the renunciations took place at the time when the renunciants and their families were in extreme fear of being forced out of the center into a hostile community and when they believed that the only way of making sure of protective detention during the war was to make themselves eligible for Department of Justice internment. If these factors and the hysteria render the act of renunciation by persons detained under these circumstances void, then the renunciations are void.

The court—very properly, in our judgment—held that the totality of circumstances constituted coercion. "The renunciants acted abnormally," said Judge Goodman, "because of abnormal conditions not of their own making . . . The Government of the United States under the stress and necessities of national defense, committed error . . . The highest standards of public morality and the inexorable requirements of good conscience rest upon the Government in its dealings with its citizens. It must be slow to afflict and quick to make retribution . . . The Government need not sheepishly confess error; it must be stalwart and forthright in its recognition of injustice. By so doing, faith and confidence in our system of law will be maintained."

East-West

Our export trade with Russia and other eastern European countries dropped from a monthly average of 26.3 million dollars during the first quarter of 1948 to 11 million dollars in April and 5.7 million dollars in May. Shipments to Russia, averaging close to seven million dollars per month during the first quarter reached the disappearing point by May, amounting to only $200,000. Exports from Czechoslovakia fell from a first-quarter monthly average of 3.4 million dollars to $300,000 in May, while exports to Poland declined from a monthly average of 9.5 million dollars for the January-March period to 1.3 million dollars in May. Imports to the United States from Russia and eastern Europe, on the other hand, rose from a monthly average of 11.7 million dollars in the first quarter to 14.4 million dollars in May, with Russia shipping us 7.3 million dollars of goods, compared with a monthly average of 4.8 million dollars during the first three months of this year.

The abrupt shrinkage in the volume of our exports to eastern Europe suggests that official definitions of potential war goods have become so comprehensive as to amount to a virtual embargo on shipments to countries behind the iron curtain. If that should be the explanation of the current drop in exports, then our policy will hamper if not eventually kill ECA efforts to revive the trade of the participating western countries of Europe with their eastern neighbors as well as the rest of the world. For western Europe needs expanded market outlets in eastern Europe while eastern Europe has to increase its exports in order to obtain means of payment for imports from the western areas. If the United States imposes unduly severe restrictions in shipments of goods and materials required to build up the productive and export capacity of eastern European countries, it will, therefore, hold back the general economic recovery of Europe that is the professed aim of ECA. Who is responsible for this rigorous screening of exports? The military?

Flight Engineers

Whether or not the decision of United Air Lines to put a third crew member on all DC-6 flights is an outgrowth of the recent crash in Pennsylvania, it is a move toward greater air safety. The operation of a plane as large and complex as the DC-6 is a difficult task for two persons even under good conditions. The addition of a combination flight engineer, radio operator and auxiliary pilot will help immeasurably when emergencies arise.

Flight engineers already are required on international flights, and several airlines have included a third man in the crews of their larger planes in domestic traffic. A Civil Aeronautics Board order provides that all DC-6s must carry this additional crewman by December 1. This order is still being resisted vigorously—and in our opinion unwisely—by certain segments of the airline industry. Of course, the operators must be concerned with economics. Additional crewmen will place an added strain on already insufficient revenues; to man 39 DC-6s United Air Lines will employ 120 new engineer-pilots. But United apparently feels, and with sound reasoning, that paying such additional salaries will be considerably cheaper than paying for crashes which the new crewmen should help prevent.

SUMMER MORNING

Dawn—and the song of birds;
Close to the window they sing,
And following each note of their music,
A mightier string.

The sound of the distant surf,
The nobler notes of the sea.
Dawn—and birds, and the ocean
Singing to me.

Hyderabad Sovereignty

Hyderabad, whose ruler, the Nizam, is reputed to be the richest man in the world, is in turmoil. The Nizam—a Muslim prince, ruling autocratically over an overwhelming majority of Hindu subjects—has shown an inclination to declare his principality a sovereign state. The government of India considers that a sovereign independent Hyderabad would be a danger to the safety of India both internally and externally.

The position of the Indian government is analogous to the British in 1857 when the Crown assumed the sovereignty of India as a result of the displacement of the Mogul Emperor at Delhi following the mutiny. If the British Crown could claim the rights of sovereignty which once were enforced by the Mogul Emperors—rights which were not challenged by any Indian state—it stands to reason that the Indian government can claim the same rights of sovereignty which were enforced by the British.

The Indian government has inherited all the assets and liabilities. What if all the states followed the line intended to be pursued by the Nizam? There would be more than 500 independent states — a situation which would make the Balkan problem seem simple. India, in that case, would be a hotbed of intrigue and warfare among the native sovereigns, and a situation similar to that in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries would be created.

Therefore, any line of policy adopted by the Indian states which would Balkanize India would be a negation of the freedom of the Indian people. Therefore, in the nature of things, nothing can affect the right of the Indian Dominion to inherit the functions appertaining to paramountcy. The Indian Dominion, consequently, exercises all the rights of paramountcy and as such no state has a right to declare itself a sovereign state.

Food Budget

You may be interested in some figures on food budgets which contrast with those you have published. In the first six months of 1948 my wife and I, taking all our meals at home, spent $137.40 for food. To this I would add, say $10, for the reduction in our stock of canned goods. We have enough good and varied food, but buy carefully, eat moderately, and waste nothing.

For breakfast each has cooked cereal, an egg and a slice of bacon, a bit of bread and some stewed fruit, which is often dried apricots. For dinner there is a small portion of fresh meat or fowl, or occasionally canned meat or fish, three or four vegetables, and a bit of canned fruit or something sweet. No steaks or lamb this year.

We eat a little margarine and less butter and want no more. Bacon grease supplies our shortening. It is very good for rolls, pies and cookies. We use no canned or frozen vegetables except our own home-canned tomatoes. Some vegetables may be warmed over without injuring their taste, notably tomatoes, green beans and sweet potatoes, which I find better for it.

Cabbage and cauliflower should be cut off and cooked only as needed. Green peas are shelled and cooked promptly. Those left from the first meal are kept in a sealed jar in the refrigerator and heated (not cooked) only as wanted. The same method serves with some other foods.

Our third daily meal is very light. We use citrus fruits or their juices regularly, in moderate quantity. We pay close attention to the season and the market, make good use of our refrigerator, avoid expensive luxuries and eat no more than we want—which is, no doubt, less than younger and more active persons require. There are probably many who could profit by our example. WEDUNIT.

Federal Inefficiency

Senator Byrd was quite wrong in saying that the Government has 600,000 too many office employes.

As a matter of fact, because of the prevailing administrative inefficiency, chaos and confusion throughout Government agencies, aside from inefficient office workers, about 95 per cent of whom have passed civil service tests, the Government, in reality, needs an additional 600,000 employes to act as assistants to the 600,000 Senator Byrd would dismiss. Before Uncle Sam will be able drastically to reduce his over-all personnel, he will, in order to secure skillful and proficient office personnel, be obliged substantially to increase Government salaries from the highest to the lowest pay levels.

Gifts To Russia

As one interested in the prevention of further war, I find Drew Pearson's letter to Stuart Symington printed in your issue July 21, both intelligent and thought provoking.

The suggestion of carrying messages and tokens of good will direct to the Russian people by means of our B-29s and small balloons is, I think, a wise and entirely workable idea. It seems an effective way of combating present unfriendly and war-mongering propaganda of the Kremlin aimed at the United States and circulated among the people of the USSR.

No woman can be indifferent to a bar of good soap which she needs for cleanliness, health and respectability. No child can resist a good candy bar. No man can fail to be impressed by what makes his wife and child happy. I'd suggest adding cigarettes for him as a further bid for his good will and evidence of ours.

Every gift item should be plainly marked "U. S. A." so that "Uncle Joe" won't be able to claim he gave it.

If help is needed in making up the packages, I suggest calling in the American Red Cross, the National Federation of Women's Clubs and the women's organizations of the churches throughout America.

The women of America do not want war.

Pershing Stamps

I suggest that Congress while in special session should order the issuance of a postage stamp to honor the late General Pershing—a 3-cent commemorative stamp and a 1-cent commemorative stamp—so that children could buy full sheets for collections. GEORGE DURST

Theater For Washington

At this late date there remains but one possible solution to the theater impasse facing Washington this fall when we will emerge as the one great world capital without a single legitimate theater.

That solution is to make available one of the school auditoriums. The auditoriums of several of our schools are more than adequate and would provide a completely satisfactory solution until a permanent theater is opened.

While the movement to make the Belasco available for theatrical use must be vigorously pressed, it is too late now for it to be available for fall productions as the theater season begins normally in September.

The American National Theater and Academy has demonstrated its sincerity and interest in our deplorable situation here by offering to restore and operate the Belasco for which nothing less than half a million dollars would be required. It would, I am sure, be most amenable to an offer to assist the Washington community to work out a most happy solution to our problem.

ANTA is extremely well qualified to do this. Congress in 1935 granted it a charter which established it in the same category as the American Red Cross and the Smithsonian Institution. It permits the establishment of a Nation-wide, tax-exempt institution.

The purposes of ANTA, a nonprofit corporation whose officers serve without pay, were established by the charter as follows:

1. The presentation of theatrical productions of the highest type.

2. The stimulation of public interest in the drama as an art belonging to the theater and literature and therefore to be enjoyed both on the stage and in the study.

3. The advancement of interest in drama through the United States by furthering production of plays of the highest type, interpreted by the best actors at a minimum cost.

The Washington Post pointed out editorially recently that "many of the most distinguished American dramatists, actors and producers are among its officers and directors. Washington would be an ideal home for ANTA and ANTA would be an ideal custodian of a Washington theater."

No better beginning toward this end could be made than in one of our schools at this time of crisis in our cultural life.

The schools throughout America are used constantly by its citizenry. In Washington they are used by many civic groups such as the Columbia Light Opera Co. and the Children's Theater.

The Barter Theater of Virginia, Virginia's State Theater and sponsored by ANTA, is presented in the schools of that State largely. The Washington Art Center Association presented Barter in Western High School in Georgetown last October.

We call upon the citizens of Washington to join us in making a school auditorium available for theater productions this fall. You can do this by passing resolutions in your clubs, civic groups, etc., calling upon the Board of Education to move in the matter.

The issue must be presented clearly and forcefully enough that conditions are not attached making it impossible to function and the auditorium must be made available early enough to allow for bookings.

Executive Secretary,

Who Was Shakespeare?

A Communication

IN VIEW of the Charles Barrell charges against Professor Dawson anent the authenticity of the Barrell X-ray pictures of portraits of Shakespeare in the Folger Library, which Barrell alleges are portraits of the poet Edward De Vere, seventeenth Earl of Oxford (published by Scientific American as authentic), I should like to ask some questions.

Why all the doubt about the Stratford William Shakspere authorship? Is it because practically nothing is known of the Stratford man—except six scrawling signatures on business documents (three on his will) spelled in three different ways, all made after his return from London? Because his favorite daughter Judith (admitted by Stratfordians) could not write her own name? Because the educational facilities of Stratford were nil? Because same Stratfordians admit that Will Shakespeare left school at 12 to become a butcher's apprentice?

Because there is not in existence a letter or scrap of paper to or from this Stratford Shakspere in correspondence with anyone, great or small, despite the legend of his association with great writers in London? Because when the Stratford man died, there is no record anywhere of the slightest contemporary comment? Because there is less known of the supposed greatest, than is known of the lesser figures creating literature during Elizabeth's era?

Because there were no manuscripts or books handed down from his home or mentioned in his will? Because there is nothing known of his life in London, no record even of where he ever lived or wrote? Because of the great Cambridge History of English Literature via the pen of famous George Saintsbury confirms all of the above?

IS IT because the great Samuel Johnson wrote of that age "Literature was yet confined to professed scholars, or to men and women of high rank? Or because Charles Dickens wrote "The life of Shakespeare is a fine mystery and I tremble each day lest something should happen"? Is it because in the latest Life of Shakespeare, Sir E. K. Chambers says of it all "the last word for a self-respecting scholarship can only be that of nescience (state of not knowing)?

Is it because the Legend of Stratford did not crystallize until 146 years after the Stratford man's birth? Or because the "trek to Stratford" did not start until early in the last century—is now a two million dollar business for Stratford? (Reader's Digest, April 1948).

In 1920, great scholar J. Thomas Looney published a book, after many years of profound scientific research, titled Shakespeare Identified, called by John Galsworthy "greatest detective story I ever read." It was an amazing revelation of the "clouded" life of Edward De Vere, seventeenth Earl of Oxford. The book has been poopoohed by Stratfordians.

Nothing has contributed to their effectiveness more than the "Baconian" theory which was based on a "clue" which moved in the wrong direction. Failing, it naturally became the object of ridicule. That makes it a bulwark of support for the Stratfordians in fighting the overwhelming evidence which has since been added to that in Shakespeare Identified. Other volumes have followed which give now a picture of an amazing man and genius. Twenty-six early poems give that "foreground" of youthful genius entirely lacking in the Stratford legend.

BROUGHT up in an atmosphere of music, poetry and Renaissance literature, Edward de Vere, at 12, became a ward of Elizabeth's court and, because of rank, its top courtier. All of his early instructors paid tribute to his genius, his love of learning. He was hailed openly several times as a great writer; he forsook court life—devoted himself to literature and drama, living "under a cloud" in consorting with players, who in those days were classed with "thieves and vagabonds."

He squandered estate after estate in support of his players known as "Oxford's Boys"; he had the most intimate relationships with the Earl of Southampton and the Herbert Brothers (to whom the great poems and the First Folio were dedicated); his inner life as revealed through the Sonnets fits those great stanzas like a glove; his love of the Dark Lady, now shown to have been Ann Vavasor, the Queen's Maid of Honor, explains many of the sonnets—as does the existence of a son, Edward Vere, who later became famous in his own right. Forty-two of the sonnets are directed to the boy born out of this secret relationship. Seventeen are addressed to someone with the same relationship which existed between Southampton and Oxford. The former was engaged to Oxford's daughter. One of the Herberts married another.

The great pedant Gabriel Harvey made an Anagram "Axiophilus" which translated reads "Oxford alias Shakespeare." Spenser called him "Sweet William." He was known as a dramatist. He had a place on the Avon—but space forbids more. Strange thing is, he felt disgraced, and wanted to bury his name. He almost succeeded. PUCK.

Harry's Clearing Decks for Tom

By Drew Pearson

SOME of Tom Dewey's advisers, especially Herbert Brownell, are so short-sighted they can't see the trees for the leaves.

When the political adviser Brownell recently blasted Truman for calling the special session of Congress, he did not seem to realize that the special session is going to be one of the luckiest breaks Tom Dewey ever got.

It means that President Truman will fight out such important and highly controversial social legislation as housing, public health, minimum wage, etc., leaving Dewey free next January to concentrate on foreign affairs.

If Truman hadn't called Congress for this showdown on domestic legislation, Dewey would have had to battle it out himself after he entered the White House. And his views on this social legislation are much closer to Truman's than to those of the Hallecks, the Wolcotts, the Tabers, the Martins and other reactionaries who control the Republican Congress. Dewey, therefore, would have been in for an embarrassing battle with his own party.

U. N. Air Bases Proposed

PENTAGON planners are dusting off a secret plan for a network of United Nations bases around the world to enforce the peace. About 50 strategic bases would be turned over to an international security force, according to this plan, which was first submitted by the Air Force in 1942.

Military strategists argue that the United Nations must demonstrate that it means business—if it intends to stay in business. If a majority of nations jointly operated these bases, even a big nation like Russia would hesitate to attack.

Note: This is one point on which both Henry Wallace and the military see eye-to-eye. The idea of round-the-world bases was a pet project of Wallace's when he was Vice President.

Unfinished Testimonial

WHEN Clifford Durr retired from the Federal Communications Commission last month, his fellow commissioners adopted a resolution praising him for his long and consistent Government service.

There were also several testimonial lunches and dinners, one of them attended by NBC's conservative vice president, Frank Russell, who, like many other radio executives, vigorously disagreed with Durr but respected his courage and ability.

Durr, a brother-in-law of Supreme Court Justice Hugo Black, is an Alabama-born liberal who has been a frequent critic of the big networks but who has always fought out in the open—for such things as freedom of speech, freedom of competition and freedom of thought.

When Durr finally rolled up the testimonial his fellow commissioners gave him and prepared to leave the desk he had occupied so long, there were only five signatures on the testimonial. One space—that of the sixth commissioner—was blank.

It was to have seen signed by Commissioner Robert Jones, the former Republican Congressman from Lima, Ohio.

All other Republican commissioners gladly signed Durr's testimonial. But not the man who was elected to Congress with the support of Gerald L. K. Smith.

Blind Sightseers

VIRGINIA BROWN and Nadine Martin, both blind since birth, somehow made their way from Wichita, Kans., to Washington the other day to make a "sightseeing" tour of the Capitol.

Some high school children led them up the steps and parked them in the rotunda to wait for a guide. There they sat for two hours, finally broke out singing a hymn to attract attention.

Capitol Police Lieut. T. E. Malloy stepped over to investigate, listened sympathetically. He feared the slippery marble steps would be too dangerous for the blind women to hike through the Capitol, but he called over several guides to give a word-picture of the building. They described the sights and answered questions far past closing time.

Then an escort of three Capitol cops helped the blind women out of the building. Sergt. R. E. Jangula hailed a taxi and handed the cabbie a bill.

"Take these ladies wherever they want to go," he said.

Eightieth Congress Error

A LOT of Congressmen actually did not know what they were voting for when, during the 1st hectic days of the Eightieth Congress, they voted to cut one million people off the Social Security rolls.

The Republican Party's 1944 platform specifically promised the extension of Social Security coverage, not its curtailment. But the Republicans voted overwhelmingly to override President Truman's veto and curtail Social Security just the same.

They voted to deny pensions and unemployment benefits to traveling salesmen, news vendors and others whose income varies with the success of their sales efforts.

In doing this, they followed a pattern for overruling the Supreme Court which the GOP Congress has followed in the tidelands case, portal-to-portal pay and the Bulwinkle bill. The Supreme Court had held that employes paid on a commission basis were entitled to Social Security benefits.

And while many Republican Congressmen did not know exactly what they were voting for—except that they were gleefully voting to override a Truman veto—their more intelligent leaders certainly did know.

Senator Bob Taft, for instance, was interviewed by an official of the American Veterans Committee who urged him to oppose the bill. After listening to the veteran's argument, Taft replied:

"Why don't you buy your insurance from private companies like I do?"

Largest group affected was salesmen. They were voted off the pension rolls on the ground they were "independent contractors." As the debate got hot in Congress, the National Conference of Salesmen's Organizations tried desperately to round up 15 or 20 of their top members and fly them to Washington to place their views before Congress. The plan failed.

For the salesmen, though classified by Congress as "independent contractors," couldn't get permission from their bosses to take time off to come here.

Rust Begins at 40

By Alton L. Blakeslee
Associated Press Science Reporter

NEW YORK, July 24. — One rule for a happy old age—don't grow rusty.

The rusting can be physical, with chronic ill health, or mental, with boredom and lack of enthusiasm. Some tips to avoid both kinds were outlined by Dr. Edward J. Stieglitz, Washington, D. C., internist and authority on human aging, at a recent conference on old-age problems.

"First," he said, "we should teach children more about the basic biology of living, and how to use and care for their bodies. We should give children the same break that industry gives to buyers of new automobiles or vacuum cleaners. The buyers get instruction books on how to care for the car and how to avoid wearing it out too soon.

"We educate children to become adults. Adults should be educated to live wisely and to prepare for old age. Anyone who doesn't anticipate old age is either stupid or a coward."

Much of the physical rusting of premature aging and disabilities comes from abuse of the body, Dr. Stieglitz warned. One common abuse is fatness, which "is invariably due to overeating and lack of self-discipline.

"Obesity shortens life. The expected death rate may be increased as much as 174 per cent of normal when people are 25 per cent or more overweight and have no complicating diseases."

Another abuse is diets deficient in vitamins, proteins or other essentials. They cause lowered resistance to infection, lessened endurance, and invite fatigue, inefficiency and chronic disease.

A third is overindulgence in alcohol.

A fourth is avoidable anxiety, which can be a factor in causing high blood pressure, stomach ulcers, goiters and other ailments. People can avoid them by self-education toward emotional maturity.

Compensations of Age

SOMEDAY, human beings may live to be 100. Meanwhile, for persons past 40, Dr. Stieglitz offered some rules for wise living to stretch the lifespan:

Prepare in advance for inevitable changes. Admit your limitations, and adapt yourself to them. Get a thorough health check-up periodically, and follow the advice.

Age brings many advantages, Dr. Stieglitz said. Judgment usually improves. There is also more skill, due to more practice. There is more endurance than in youth. But less muscular speed. The ability to learn is about the same at 80 as at 12. Memory is about as good. There may be less speed in "memorizing, but there is likely to be greater accuracy.

"The longer men live, the more time they have to think. To think is to grow, and to grow is to live. So there are exciting chances to live and grow in the latter third of life."

Having a job, or otherwise keeping busy, is one of the biggest factors in happiness after 65, a study by Dr. Judson T. Landis, associate professor of sociology at Michigan State College, showed.

Among a group of 450 old people, the happiest were those who had good health, who didn't have to depend on a State pension and who still were working and feeling independent, he found.

Those who worried were decidedly unhappier.

Women generally were happier than men, Dr. Landis said. One reason is that women can keep busy at many of the same occupations, like sewing and housework, as when they were younger. Men after retirement undergo a more abrupt change. Men and women with hobbies were happier.

The chance for happiness was greater in those with greater education, Dr. Landis added. Partly, this was because reading became a more important hobby. They also were more likely to have won financial independence.

Elsewhere in Science:

OXYGEN in the air is one of the common causes of rancidity in foods containing fats and oils. To combat it, the Tennessee Eastman Corp. has developed two new anti-oxidants. One is used to protect salad oils, cooking oils, margarine, peanut butter and other products. The second has shown good results in protecting animal fats and especially lard. Only small percentages of the harmless chemicals are used.

* * * *

Bad posture may sometimes lead to stomach ulcers, says Dr. C. R. Nelson of the Ottawa, Ill., Arthritis Sanatorium and Diagnostic Clinic. Poor stance can restrict the motion of spinal joint with normal blood circulation structures and this may interfere leading to ulcer formation, he writes in the Osteopathic magazine.

Color differences much too fine to be seen by the human eye are detected by a new machine developed at Binghamton, N. Y. It's an electronic color analyzer. It's so sensitive that it can measure one-millionth of the light from an auto headlight, said Dr. Hermann Hoerlin, chief physicist of the Ansco division of the General Aniline & Film Corp. It is expected to be useful not only in photographic work but also in measuring or matching colors in textiles, paints and dyes, and in medical research.

Matter of Fact

Wallace Must Wonder Sometimes

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

PHILADELPHIA, July 24.—The Wallace party convention has not, of course, been a convention at all. It has been, rather, a dreary and sometimes nauseating spectacle, carefully and quite obviously stage-managed by the American Communist Party in the interests of the foreign policy of the Soviet Union.

It is difficult to believe that even Henry Wallace, despite his enormous capacity for self-delusion, has not some dim notion of this fact. Before the convention, Wallace was clearly disturbed by the Communist coloration of his "crusade," and even indulged in a little very mild and very tentative "red-baiting." But he consoled himself, according to those who have followed his wanderings, by the conviction that time was on his side.

He firmly believed that as the international crisis deepened, and particularly after Harry Truman was nominated by the Democrats, the non-Communist liberals and labor leaders would suddenly see the light. Then the men who were once his friends and supporters would rally to his side.

Nothing of the sort has, of course, happened. The CIO and AFL have even refused to dignify the Wallace party by testifying before its platform committee. CIO President Philip Murray and the other non-Communist CIO leaders are preparing quietly to support Truman, however unenthusiastically.

Tugwell's Discomfiture

WALLACE'S only labor support derives from such men as the Electrical Workers' Julius Emspak, whose party identification has reportedly been "Comrade Juniper"; Harry Bridges of the Longshoremen, whose political leanings are well-known, and such acknowledged Communists as Ben Gold of the Fur Workers and Donald Henderson of the Tobacco Workers. Wallace has attracted no labor support whatsoever except from those unions where Stalinists have captured power. And he must know it.

Wallace must know too that not a single New Dealer or liberal of any stature from among his old associates of the Roosevelt days has come out in his support, with the possible exception of R. G. Tugwell. Tugwell himself is now reported to be suffering from certain qualms.

Like any liberal who tries to work with Communists, he has been forced into a ludicrous position. He has said that he is personally in favor of the Marshall Plan. But although he was the titular chairman of the platform committee, the platform roundly condemns the plan as imperialistic. Tugwell has unhappily announced that this apparent contradiction is "unimportant."

The plain fact is that neither Tugwell, nor the decorative importations from Hollywood and New York, nor the fringe groups of fuzzy-minded non-Communists who have joined Wallace, nor even Wallace himself, really has anything to do with the policy and strategy of the Wallace movement. Wallace, and the Wallace "crusade," are now entirely in the hands of a small group of astute insiders. Of these the most influential are C. B. Baldwin, Lee Pressman and John Abt.

Baldwin, Wallace's "campaign manager," is not and doubtless never has been a member of the Communist Party, although he has joined numerous party fronts, conspicuously the party's legal instrument, the Civil Rights Congress. But Baldwin has not been known to step on any Communist toes. He is a "united fronter"—one who believes in cooperation with the Communists. Inevitably, either unhappily as in Tugwell's case, or contentedly as in Baldwin's, a united fronter soon finds himself doing all the cooperating.

Strong Man Pressman

LEE PRESSMAN is in a different category. A heavy-set man with a strong, sardonic face, a powerful personality and an agile mind, Pressman was until recently counsel for the CIO. Until Philip Murray fired him on the Wallace issue, he was the chief friend at court of the CIO's minority Communist wing. The real author of the Wallace platform, Pressman is already probably the most powerful single influence in the Wallace movement. He has frequently been reported to be a member of the Communist Party and he has not publicly denied it.

Abt, former counsel of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, is a kind of cut-rate Pressman, sharing his views, his affiliations and an office at Wallace headquarters. There are other insiders, like Hannah Dorner, publicist for a number of party-line causes, and Lew Frank, Wallace's ghostwriter, who was chief whip for the pro-Communist faction in the American Veterans Committee. But Baldwin, Pressman and Abt are the chief manipulators of the strings which cause Wallace to do his ungainly dance.

One cannot help but wonder what is going on in the mind of Henry Wallace, former Vice President of the United States, as this macabre spectacle draws to a close. It has not even been entertaining, simply because the well-oiled party machine allowed for no real surprises. The "demonstrations" have had that quality of loudly spurious enthusiasm which prevails in eastern Europe.

Meanwhile, the public opinion polls show Wallace steadily losing ground, while his old friends and associates of the Roosevelt days denounce him. Despite all this, there is little doubt that Wallace, now wholly cut off from reality by the little group which surrounds him, will carry on his dreary "crusade" to its bitter, undignified end.

. . . And Allies Took So Much Pains

Tojo Trial Verdict Won't Impress the Japs

TOKYO, July 24.—There seems to be general agreement here in steaming Tokyo this summer that some day before long 11 august judges from 11 victorious nations are going to hang Hidechi Tojo, war lord of Japan in the 1940s, somewhat higher than Haman.

Similar dread sentences, according to the betting odds, will be intoned to the accompaniment of 150,000 words of judicial palaver, against some others among Tojo's 24 codefendants.

Against the day of this stupendous verdict, great preparations are being made. The palatial home of old Kenzo Hattori, Japan's greatest watch and clock manufacturer, has been ringed with barbed wire. Locked up inside, for security reasons, about 180 persons will "process" the verdict during some six to eight weeks.

They will translate and mimeograph it, getting it ready for fast distribution. You can expect this event in late August or early September.

By that time, almost 2½ years and nine million dollars will have been spent to make this trial a great success. Stenographers have taken down about 9,682,000 words of testimony and argument. The sessions have been attended by 50,597 Allied spectators and 142,225 Japanese.

The United States Army Signal Corps has exposed 697,146 feet of motion picture film, and other records of such magnitude have been rolled up as to dwarf all other trials in history.

Too Many Doubts

ALL these endeavors may add up to common sense in the minds of Western observers, but they apparently have left the Japanese people completely cold, after a brief flicker of interest when the trial opened.

The Japanese have long since written off Tojo and some of his codefendants as dead. They are not at all convinced that the trial is a fair one. They pretty well agree that some of their prewar and wartime leaders who have gone scot-free are just as guilty of crimes against humanity as any of the defendants in the dock. Sympathy for the families of the accused prevails.

Certainly no moral stigma is going to attach to these men, as they march off to gallows or to prison at hard labor, as stigma would rest on hanged criminals in the West.

Having heard various Japanese reactions to the trials while testimony was being taken, this correspondent has obtained interviews on the subject from three persons of considerably higher than average intelligence among Hirohito's subjects. Their composite testimony reveals Japan.

SHINICHIRO KUDO is assistant managing editor of the Tokyo newspaper Mainichi and was London correspondent for his newspaper during the Battle of Britain.

"There has been so little interest in Japan in the war trials since their novelty wore off two years ago," Kudo says, "that I can't remember a single letter written by a reader to the editors of the Mainichi about them.

"I know that some Japanese, particularly demobilized soldiers, feel that people responsible for getting Japan into the war should be punished severely. But everybody knows the accused are not the only guilty ones. There are several mere robots among the defendants. If the trials were to have had any real effect, they would have to have taken in a great many more people.

"As a whole, the Japanese people are happy that their Emperor has been left untouched. Of course, they don't believe the Emperor is entirely free from responsibility for the war. But they love him. They are somewhat in the position of children who know that their father may have done some wrong, but are glad that he has reformed and no harm will come to him.

"There is real sympathy among many people for some of the accused—particularly old diplomats like Togo and Shigemitsu, who never were militarists. The Japanese people still have mixed feelings about the war. About half of them, I should say, believe it was a bad thing to wage it, and the other half merely realize that it was a bad thing to lose."

The 25 Scapegoats

ENTAI TOMAMATSU is a Buddhist priest who has built a modern temple in the heart of Tokyo, who has traveled widely in Europe and who commands a large following when he speaks on the Japanese radio to a nation of which one half the people profess to be Buddhists.

"I am afraid there is too great a tendency on the part of the Japanese to feel themselves absolved from all responsibility in the war because only 25 of the leaders of the nation, or persons who have committed outrages, are on trial," Tomamatsu says.

"The Japanese are too deep in the struggle for living to pay much attention to the trials. Many say they are just the Americans' business and no business of the people here. I think the trials may have some good effect on youth here, because they show people who once swaggered around as national leaders now humbled in the seats of the accused.

"The people as a whole certainly do not yet believe waging an aggressive war is a sin. Not enough people feel that way. You have to remember that since the beginning of the Meiji era, war has always paid Japan, and some people still argue that if it had been conducted in a better manner it might have been won. To them, too, there is bound to be some cynicism about the trials themselves, because, they arise from the relationship of victor and vanquished."

MRS. TSUNEKO AKAMATSU is an elected member of the House of Councilors. She is a Social Democrat, she is one of the small group of broadly educated Japanese women who have been social workers long enough in her country to have national renown. According to Dr. Justin Williams, liaison officer between General MacArthur's staff and Parliament, she is one of the ablest and most public-spirited parliamentarians of the postwar era.

"With the war trials nearing their end," she says, "it seems to me that those persons accused before the International Military Tribunal are victims of the mistaken direction of Japanese history throughout the Meiji era. If the war had ended 10 years ago, a different set of men would be in the dock. If the war were ending 10 years from now, still another set of men would be there.

"But these men were surely the leaders of their nation at the time of the last war, and therefore must take responsibility for their nation's deeds. But I am a Buddhist, and in a broad sense cannot approve one man's trying another and condemning him to death.

"The Yokohama atrocity trials have filled the Japanese people with shame. They have shown how savage some of our people have been. By now they must have erased from people's minds the idea that the Japanese are a superior people to others—more civilized and more cultured.

"But from the standpoint of pure morals, I could not say these trials were completely fair. It would have been better, I think, if the trials had been conducted by neutrals—rather than by the victor trying the vanquished.

Canonized by Death

"THERE is a good chance, of course, that the 25 men on trial may become martyrs. Japanese are sentimentalists about death, and admire men who die knowingly and unflinchingly. Every reasoning person in Japan must feel a certain sense of responsibility for the war. So when some of the accused are sentenced to death, they probably will be, people may have the feeling that these people are dying to atone for the sins of us all.

"The way Japanese children are educated in the next 10 years will be a decisive factor in determining how our posterity will look upon these defendants. Today Japanese women have a keen sense of sympathy for the families of the accused. Many times I have heard the remark: 'What if my husband were one of the accused? We are fortunate that he is not.'"

Ten years, then, of supervising the education of Japanese children may be the further price that the victorious Western Allies must pay if they want to be sure the Tojo trial has its desired effect.

British Slug Hard in Malaya

RAF and Navy in Vestpocket War

By Harris Jackson
Associated Press Staff Writer

KUALA LUMPUR, July 24.—A vestpocket war is under way in Malaya.

British and Gurkha soldiers, the Royal Air Force, the Royal Navy and Malayan police are striking hard to destroy Communist guerillas. The British say definite evidence has been found that the guerillas planned to seize control of the country.

The British, slow in taking action, now are slugging with everything they have.

Responsible authorities reckon the guerilla strength at about 4000. Almost all are Chinese Communists. Most of them were in the anti-Japanese underground.

The guerillas operate in the dark, green Malayan jungles, in bands of from 12 to 200. Their activities have taken the form of attacks on police stations, raids on rubber estates, frankly terrorist killings of Europeans and prominent Chinese, ambushes of passing automobiles and attacks on food shops for supplies.

Block Reinforcement

JUST how many ground troops and police the British are using is a security secret. Probably the figure is around 20,000. The Royal Navy patrols Malaya's coast to prevent reinforcement by junk from Siam or South China. RAF planes patrol in search of hideouts and sometimes attack them with rockets. All action is closely coordinated.

The British offensive takes several forms: Troops sweep jungle areas where guerillas are reported or suspected; armored cars patrol the roads; roundups of suspected persons are frequent. The record of guerillas killed or captured is increasing slowly.

Planters have been armed and organized. Guards have been stationed on estates. Public registration and mandatory use of identity cards soon will go into effect. Plans are under way to station a special force on the Malaya-Siam frontier to keep guerillas from slipping across the border.

Travelers and baggage are searched at road blocks. A careful watch is kept on unusually large food sales. Persons are cautioned not to have large sums of money—guerillas might stage robberies to fill their treasury.

The government hopes to starve its opponents out of the jungle and catch them as they emerge. Otherwise, military and police leaders admit, the intiative remains with the guerillas. The jungles are vast and difficult to penetrate. Much of the efficient British intelligence system was destroyed in the war.

70 in 6 Million

MOST authorities expect the situation to get worse before it gets better, but they take heart from the fact that the terror mainly has been confined to a few areas. The guerillas by mid-July had killed about 70 persons out of a population of six million.

The British also are making an all-out effort to destroy the civilian Communist network which provides brains and propaganda to the guerillas. More than 1000 persons have been seized in mass roundups. Charges against most still are secret.

About all the authorities can't do under their new powers is sentence someone to death without trial. Trials are held secretly.

Prominent Malayans became so aroused at the Communist offensive that not one "nay" was voted when the federation's legislative council approved the emergency powers.

The terror began in May when a rash of strikes broke out on rubber estates. Guerilla attacks came regularly. Murders were daily affairs. Top government officials say it is Communist-inspired and led. They believe it is part of a plan to seize control of Malaya and also is part of a larger scheme to stir up trouble all over Asia.

So far, however, the Communist Party has not been outlawed despite popular pressure. Officials prefer that it remain in the open, they say. And the legality of the Communist Party in Britain has had a strong effect on action here.

Nameless Waifs A Berlin Problem

BERLIN (AP).—Children without a name are proving a problem in postwar Germany. There are 2600 such children in Berlin alone, German authorities say. They arrived with the stream of refugees fleeing from the east as the war drew to a close, or were found among the ruins of Berlin.

Many of them were so small when war tore them from their parents that they hadn't learned their own names, their birthplace or their home addresses. For the moment they are charges of the city while authorities endeavor to trace parents or relatives.

"The chances of helping them find their parents or relatives are pretty small," an official of the German Tracing Bureau said. The bureau searches for six to eight months. If there is no success, Berlin authorities provide the child identification papers as best they can, because in the present-day Germany of ration cards and zonal boundaries, no one can live or move without documented personal records.

Fourth Marines' Mascot Is Dead

SAN DIEGO (AP).—Soochow is dead of old age. It was sad news for the men of the old Fourth Marine Regiment who kept the dog alive through three years in Japanese prison camps.

The dog was picked up along Soochow Creek as a pup when the regiment was stationed in Shanghai. That was in 1937. Adopted by the regiment, he left with it when it went to the Philippines in 1941. After the fall of Corregidor the mascot went with some of the men to the Bilibid prison camp and remained there until liberation in 1945. Since then he had been at the Marine Corps Recruit Depot in San Diego.

Soochow had the rank of sergeant and held the specification serial number 037, or "meat cutter." He qualified as a first-class swimmer. Two offenses were listed against him in his service record. Once he went AWOL and again he was charged with keeping company with a female of questionable character.

Housewife Threatens Real French Crisis

By Theodore H. White

PARIS, July 24.—Most political observers feel that in the next three months France faces not a normal emergency of politics and cabinets, but a great historic decision. She must choose to remain a democratic republic or accept a new form of totalitarianism, possibly of the Left but more likely of the Right.

The crisis is one of paradox. Though French industry is booming and the people are working as never before, the French are unhappier than they have been since the liberation of Paris.

The cold figures of recovery are impressive. Twice as many tractors are chugging on farms as before the war. Electricity production is 40 per cent higher than in 1938. French miners are digging prewar tonnages of coal; pig iron, textiles, chemicals are all close to 1938 levels.

Nor is recovery merely a matter of statistics. Paris shop windows are stocked with silks, exquisite leather goods and new furniture. No month passes but some old familiar product returns to the open market. At night the great squares are brilliantly floodlit and, to the rich, Parisian restaurants offer such food as cannot be matched even in America. Over the surface of this well-being, some 80,000 American tourists are scattering dollars with open-handed lavishness.

Power Through Unions

BENEATH the glittering surface, however, a crisis of discontent is developing that no one can clarify quite accurately. France eats better, dresses better, enjoys life more than does England. Yet one of Britain's leaders emerged from several recent sessions with members of the French cabinet saying: "I smell gunpowder in the air."

Mme. Jean Dupont, or Mrs. Average French Housewife, is the most potent force in French politics today. Her power comes from the fact that there are five million Monsieur Duponts, organized in a network of rugged, active French trade unions. The unions are the most effective transmission belts of discontent in France; the substance of this discontent is very real.

Dupont is earning 10 times more money—in paper francs—than before the war. But everything Mme. Dupont buys costs her 15 to 20 times as much. Food and food costs dominate the talk of the Dupont family every evening. They are pinched, and they are angry.

The electrician, the carpenter, the dentist can manage to make ends meet by working long hours. But the workers who live on wages fixed by government decree are pressed to the wall. White-collar workers, civil servants, widows on pension or annuity, live even worse; they are being squeezed to the margin of actual hunger.

It is not so much that France is suffering from food shortages as that a basic change has taken place in the distribution of food. Half of the country lives better than it did before the war and the other half lives much worse.

The peasants are the new kings of French life; what they choose to sell is sold at high prices, but a much greater proportion of the national product is being kept on the farm than ever before.

The little retailers, the food and clothing merchants, are also making out well—their profit margins run from 30 to 100 per cent. It is the city dweller who is suffering.

Fateful Four Years

PRIOR to the war, France had been going downhill for 20 years; the war speeded the process to the point of bankruptcy. After victory, it was obvious that France's old-fashioned, neglected industrial plant could not export enough to pay for the cotton, oil, coal and fats required from abroad.

By the Marshall Plan and a system of Draconian controls, the government hopes to reorganize the backward factories enough to give France a balance in foreign trade. If this cannot be done in four years with American aid, then France may cease to be a great nation.

The Government is making this huge investment by holding wages low, taxing everyone but the peasant to the utmost, borrowing from the United States and pouring all its industrial energy into making capital goods rather than cheap trade articles for household consumption. In a dictatorship, such an investment is made by sealing off the grumbling of the people with secret police and censorship. France, a democracy, lets her people grumble out loud.

This grumbling is enormous. The workers and white-collar clerks are uninterested in the production of 1952 or 1953. For them, the four-year plan is pie in the sky—they want to know what the government is doing for them now.

When Mme. Dupont asks, the government points with pride to a sizable bill of particulars. It has frozen rents to the point where a French worker has the lowest rent in the world, and landlords are almost expropriated. A four-room apartment in a good building is still rented by its original tenant at prewar prices—less than 1000 francs, or about $3 a month in American money. The French worker spends an average of only 3 per cent of his monthly income in rent. No new building is going on with these controls, and tenants in possession cling tight.

The government has held steady the price of coal. It has kept the price of government-produced electricity and cooking gas fixed for six months. It has passed broad social security laws giving paid vacations, old-age pensions and severance pay to factory workers. But it has not helped Mme. Dupont where she wants it most: the cost of food. The Duponts judge the government with their stomachs.

A June Promise

THE present phase of the French crisis began last December when, under Communist leadership which sought to attack the Marshall Plan, the General Federation of Labor called a general strike. Socialist and nonparty union leaders sided with the government, and the strikes crumbled.

The friendly union leaders accepted the government's dictum that wages must remain fixed only in return for the most solemn promise that by June prices would be lowered.

From January to May the government, by the most intricate financial measures, kept prices almost steady. In May they came unstuck, not too seriously but in the wrong places. Wine, fish, fruit led the way. Socialist and Catholic union leaders joined Communists in a demand that the government force prices down or let wages go up.

And now the French wheat crop, which a few weeks ago gave promise of being an all-time beauty, is threatened by an unseasonably cold summer. If the sun shines again soon, however, the August harvest may still be good enough to increase the basic bread ration.

The uncertainty over the future of the French economy translates itself upward, layer by layer, from factory bench and country crossroads through thousands of little politicians until it reaches the red plush seats of the National Assembly. There the deputies split three ways—and in their split roughly reflect the divisions that separate the French people. Each of these groups—the Communists, the Gaullists and the middle-of-the-road Third Force—has a precisely calculated strategy for the next few months.

A Weakened Weapon

THE Communists, though weakest in over-all numbers, have the largest group of disciplined followers. They see the solution only in complete nationalization of French industry. But the Communists have been so vividly portrayed by their enemies as naked agents of a foreign power that their ability to call out the great mass of the workers has been heavily damaged. The Communists know that they can win mass following only if prices rise to the point where the unions are willing to accept violence as the only solution.

No one can offer an accurate estimate of the strength of Gen. De Gaulle's RPF (Rally of the French People), but it is the best organized group in the country after the Communists. Its power rests in the army officers, the peasants, the rich and discontented everywhere. The Gaullists have a fanatical fringe that includes former Vichyites, and a military underground of unknown proportions.

Gaullist power has grown enormously recently, and it is estimated that their share of the popular vote would be almost 40 per cent today.

The Gaullists see the crisis as one brought on by national decadence, lack of vigor in national leadership and an undisciplined working class.

See Stepping Stone

THE Gaullists believe they can outwait the government and outfight the Communists. In the coming October elections for the Council of the Republic (a very weak French version of the American Senate), they hope they will benefit enough by resentment over prices to gain an absolute majority. If they win it, they can force the government to dissolve the Assembly and then go on to win control of the entire government. If the workers strike over prices and violence breaks out before the elections, they believe their young zealots and friends in the army can win in the streets.

The middle-of-the-road group that call themselves the Third Force are thus left in control of an unpopular government outflanked in emotional appeal by both Communists and Gaullists. They see France as a sick country whose recovery has been substantial, but which is now squirming with the nasty temper of a slow convalescent. They feel that given another year or two in power, their program of industrialization and reequipment will begin to bring prices down and make France well.

The government does not offer an inspiring spectacle. It tacks and turns, shaving prices here, satisfying the peasants there, yielding to the Catholic Church on one point and trade union leaders on another. It is dependent on too many factors beyond its own control to give bold leadership — dependent for its very existence on a good harvest, on continued help from America, on the vagaries of the international crises that fix the military expenditures and the coal imports from the Ruhr.

Many of the Third Force government leaders are men with brilliant wartime records of partisan resistance or combat against the Germans. If they seem small and uninspiring as they speak in the Assembly, it is not because they lack courage. It is because, rightly or wrongly, they feel they cannot afford the luxury of dramatics; they dare not go to the polls to ask a grumbling people for more self-denial and more self-discipline.

O'Dwyer and 'Tiger' Patch Things Up

By Saul Pett

From Associated Press Newsfeatures

NEW YORK, July 24 (AP).—All is buddy-buddy again with the Tiger of Tammany Hall and Mayor William O'Dwyer.

They ended a two-week slugfest yesterday with agreement on a compromise candidate for the post of New York County (Manhattan) surrogate, an important job politically because the surrogate has a wide appointive power.

The battle, itself, was unusual in city politics—since time was when a Democratic Mayor of New York would sooner take a salary cut than talk back to Tammany Hall.

But when the split occurred over the designation of a Democratic candidate for surrogate O'Dwyer threatened to build his own political organization and told Tammany to stay in the "gutter where it belongs."

The Tiger, which only recently began to take on weight again after 12 years of famine under the late Mayor LaGuardia, ripped right back at O'Dwyer. Frank J. Sampson, an O'Dwyer man, was replaced by Manhattan Borough President Hugo E. Rogers as leader of the Hall.

Tweed and Croker

TAMMANY has been consigned to the gutter or rubbish heap before. It has always bounced back. The latest comeback, in the wake of the tide of reform which began with the Seabury investigation, has been the hardest.

In 1873, Tammany became a world-wide symbol for wholesale political corruption when William Marcy "Boss" Tweed was sent to the clink for robbing the city of an estimated 40 million dollars. But three years later Tammany was back in power.

In 1901, Tammany Leader Richard Croker, threatened with prosecution, left the country for Ireland with all his properties. Seth Low, a reform mayor, came in, but lasted only two years.

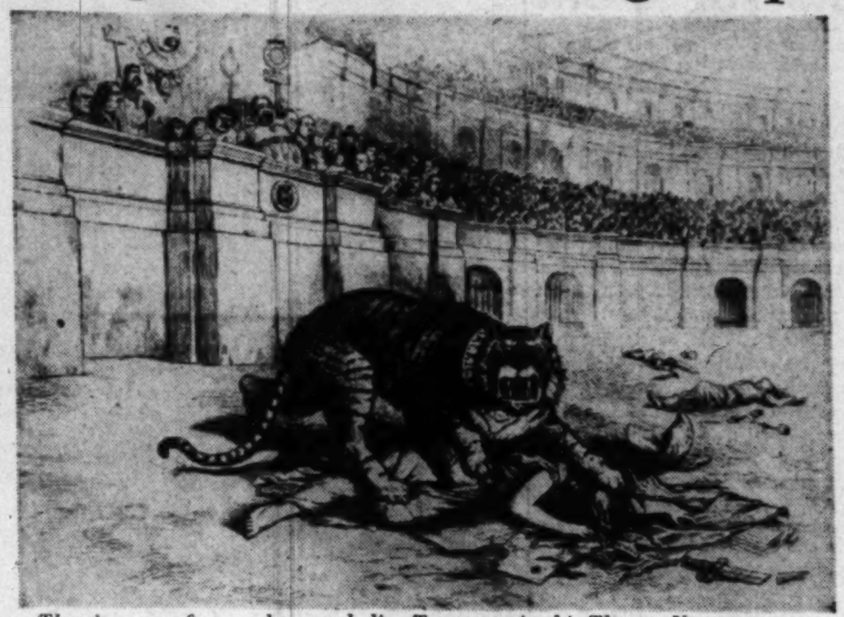
Even after the "tin box" investigation which brought Jimmy Walker's resignation under pressure from Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Tammany rode back to power. In a special election it put John P. O'Brien in City Hall with a record-breaking one million votes. O'Brien served the remaining year of Walker's term and then was licked by LaGuardia, who became the only reform mayor in New York history to last more than one term.

The causes of Tammany's decline since then are various. Some believe it never really recovered from the "tin box" probe. Others attribute the slump to population shifts which made Brooklyn and the Bronx more important politically than the Borough of Manhattan, Tammany's bailwick.

Began in Taverns

FOR purposes of definition, Tammany Hall now is more a state of mind than a hall. In fact, it no longer has a hall.

Two organizations bear the name. There is Tammany Hall, the political organization, which occupies a suite of offices in mid-Manhattan. Down a few blocks on the same street is the Society of Tammany, a fraternal and benevolent organization, which says it is nonpolitical but which makes its home at the National Democratic Club.



The tiger was first used to symbolize Tammany in this Thomas Nast cartoon in Harper's Weekly, in 1871

In its early days after the American Revolution, Tammany made its home in various taverns. As it prospered, it began to go in for big buildings. These used to be leased to the New York County Democratic Committee, traditionally another name for Tammany. The last such grand structure, a $950,000 job built during the Walker regime, was sold in 1943 and now is occupied by a labor union.

Tammany, the society, came first. In the days just before the Revolution, Americans loyal to King George set up societies called St. George, St. Andrew and St. David. In ridicule of the imported saints, revolutionists "canonized" an Indian chief named Tammany, noted for his wisdom and benevolence. Thus came the Sons of St. Tammany.

This started in Philadelphia, not New York, and went into eclipse when the colonists won their independence. It emerged again in New York, as the Society of Tammany or Columbian Order. Tammany's original constitution provided that on Columbus Day a brother should deliver a "long talk" in honor of Chris.

Jeffersonian Strategy

THE New York Tammany dates from 1786. The society still abounds in Indian ceremony and titles. Meetings are called council fires. The calumet, or peace pipe, is given a place in the councils. The whole works is run by 13 sachems, who choose the big fellow, the grand sachem.

The sachems and the braves jumped whole-hog into politics during the fight of the Republicans (later called Democrats) against the Federalists' bid for more and more centralization of power. The society helped elect Republican (Democratic) Tom Jefferson President in 1805.

This was the first example of Tammany strategy at the polls. In those days, people had to have property to qualify as voters. There were more people than property. So Tammany arranged to have a number of men share ownership of the same property, and thus they all voted.

Public criticism over the entrance of a private society into politics brought a change. In 1805, the society incorporated as a benevolent and fraternal order. Tammany Hall apparently was created as a separate political organization, but actually the leaders of the two groups were either the same or very chummy.

Immigrants' Friend

THE HALL reached its greatest power in the middle of the nineteenth century, when the flood tide of immigrants, especially Irish, poured into New York. Unlike other political groups, Tammany welcomed the immigrants, speeded up their naturalization, helped them get located.

Republican opponents could charge corruption, and sometimes prove it, but the real source of Tammany power was being solidified all the time—in the tenement districts. There the Tiger district leaders did their most effective work.

The poor were fed, the unfortunate commiserated, the jobless given work, the sick cared for, and the pauper dead given a decent burial. The technique was thorough; it paid off in votes.

It paid off in jobs, too. Tammany, the society, lists among its past members one President (Andrew Jackson); three Vice Presidents; six Cabinet members; 15 New York Governors; eight United States Senators; 13 speakers of the New York Assembly; an unspecified number of justices of the Supreme Court of the United States and of New York State; about 30 mayors of New York, Ambassadors to foreign countries and members of Congress.

Quite a record for a fraternal order.

Canadian East And West Tug For the Reins

By Robert Bunnelle

Associated Press Staff Writer

OTTAWA, July 24.—A fight that may shake Canada's very being is shaping over its leadership.

The National Liberal Party Convention meets here August 5 to name a successor to Prime Minister William Lyon Mackenzie King. He plans to retire soon, after more than 20 years in office.

A half dozen men are considered potential successors. The two most generally favored are Louis Stephen St. Laurent, suave, 66-year-old French-Canadian, who is presently King's Secretary of State for External Affairs, and James Garfield Gardiner, 64, bellicose, western-born Secretary for Agriculture.

They are as different as night and day. In their personal differences they represent many of the differences between Canada's east and west: differences they will fight over politically at the drop of a hat.

Industrial Background

ST. LAURENT, himself bilingual, comes from the big French-speaking Province of Quebec. Urbane, of medium height, he was a successful corporation lawyer before King took him into the Cabinet in 1941. His interests thus were more the interests of Canada's relatively industrialized east than of the farming west. Some of his opponents think this background is scarcely compatible with Liberal Party principles. St. Laurent is a Catholic.

Gardiner is a man of bantam aggressiveness, just under 5 feet 5. His ancestors were Scots and he's proud of that. He was born on a farm and he still runs one, although he's been in politics since 1914. He resigned the premiership of Saskatchewan to join the cabinet in 1935. His principal support comes from the western farm bloc. In Canada's eastern maritimes, the farmers charge he has played favorites with the west. He belongs to the United Church of Canada, Protestant church of the prairies.

Critics of St. Laurent say he's too much of a statesman and not enough of a politician for the Prime Minister's job. Critics of Gardiner say he's too much of a politician and not a smooth enough statesman to swing it.

The more violent partisans of each cry that the other will favor industry over agriculture and vice-versa, the east over the west and vice-versa, the French over English-speaking Canada and vice-versa, the Catholics over the Protestants and vice-versa.

Wiser heads, trying to stop the ballooning of such prejudicial issues, fear these can only intensify existing jealousies.

A Varicolored Ribbon

HABITABLE Canada is 3000 miles long and from 100 to 400 miles wide. Thus it already has such diverse sectional interests and so many problems of intercommunication that the government must avoid those things likely to intensify regional and racial differences.

Prime Minister King, master of compromise, is regarded by many as the greatest single unifying influence of this country. Many fear that when he retires sectional differences will flare to a degree threatening national unity. There often is talk of secession in the west, in the maritimes and in Quebec when toes get trampled.

St. Laurent has the tacit backing of King and many cabinet members. Gardiner, besides the backing of western farmers, has the support of many of those opposed to St. Laurent on racial or religious grounds.

While these two men are front runners in the race now, there are several others who might step into the picture in case of a deadlock or destroying dispute. They include Finance Minister Douglas Abbott, 50; Defense Minister Brooke Claxton, 51; Health Minister Paul Martin, 45; Transport Minister Lionel Chevrier, 45, and Trade Minister Clarence Decatur Howe, 62, who was born in Waltham, Mass.

Two provincial politicians also may get backing at the convention. There are brilliant and youthful Stuart Garson, Premier of Manitoba, and Angus L. MacDonald, Premier of Nova Scotia. Garson has indicated friendship for St. Laurent. Some think this is because he feels his turn will come next anyway and that he might be brought into leadership sooner if something unexpected happens.

St. Laurent Favored

MOST of those in Ottawa who will express unofficial opinions on the convention are sure St. Laurent will be named party leader and succeed King as Prime Minister. There are others who cautiously predict that the delegates may kick over the traces and pick Gardiner or a dark horse.

Under this country's system of government, the party which has the most elected representatives in the national House of Commons names the Prime Minister. The Liberals are that party presently, and their leader thus automatically would succeed King when he steps out.

King has indicated he will retire within a few months after a new party leader is named—remaining in office just long enough to give him a start. But some people feel that the old master, if he saw a crisis developing nationally or internationally, might be persuaded to stay on longer than that, possibly until the next election, which by constitutional law must be called not later than 1950.

Rich Iron Mines That Fed Japan Now Lying Idle

By Spencer Davis

Associated Press Staff Writer

MANILA, July 24—One of the world's greatest high grade iron ore deposits is resting idle and almost forgotten on Hainan Island, six miles off the southern tip of China.

Deposits of more than 600 million tons were located and feverishly exploited by the Japanese during the war. Hainan iron was one of the hidden sources of Japan's strength. By the word of one Japanese engineer, the deposits produced 1,500,000 tons when Manchurian mines, after years of effort, were unable to turn out much.

Since Hainan's return to her rightful owner, China, British interests made an arrangement through the Chinese government to deliver a million tons of ore to the Japanese blast furnaces, built specially to treat Hainan iron. Supreme headquarters in Japan bought it for $16 a ton. But it is understood that the contract has not been fulfilled.

On a recent reconnaissance flight over Hainan, Lieut. Col. Charles H. Andrus of San Antonio, a petroleum engineer in civil life, found out why the contract was in default. A vital railroad bridge leading from a mine to the harbor at Bakli Bay, 42 miles southwest, was washed out. A hydroelectric plant, only one completed out of 14 the Japanese had planned, seemed broken down.

Andrus, who knows this ground thoroughly, was able to pronounce mining at a standstill.

Across the gulf from Hainan in French Indo-China, there is high-grade coal which could make the steel all Asia is hungry for, if China went ahead with its much-discussed industrialization of South China.

Hainan also has gold, silver, tin, lead, zinc and lots of copper. There are indications of coal.

Andrus led a liberation team to Hainan after the war and found the island a hotbed of fighting factions. There were Chinese Communists, guerillas, wild native groups, Hongkong labor crews, bandits and so-called Chinese nationalists. Yet Japan had been able to work Hainan into its war economy.

The Magazine Rack

By Katharine Graham

ALTHOUGH Good Housekeeping lists it under fiction, Betty MacDonald's new book is anything but that. The author of "The Egg and I" tells how she got tuberculosis and went to a sanitarium in "The Plague and I," the first third of which is run in this issue. Mrs. MacDonald applies herself to the telling of this tale with the same fine frenzy as before, but it's designed to be only incidentally funny and fundamentally it's quite moving.

This part deals with her early life in a family of five children whose motto was, "People are healthy, and anybody who isn't is a big stinker." Her father, a mining engineer in Butte, Mont., made the children run around the block before breakfast every morning in winter, hike for miles in summer and drink 10 glasses of water a day.

Gammy, however, was a pessimist, and enjoyed being one. She considered childhood a hazardous time of life. If children weren't bitten by rattlesnakes, eaten by wild animals killed by robbers or struck by lightning, why, catarrh, consumption and leprosy were just around the corner.

"What a pity that she wasn't alive when I did get tuberculosis. It would have been such a satisfaction to her!" exclaims the author.

Holiday, with a good sense of the news behind the news, reports on the Corn Belt, on the State of Iowa, which provides one-tenth of all the food that America produces, and on the Iowa State Fair, greatest food festival in the world.

Wagons and bicycles have been replaced by acres of shiny parked automobiles. Nattily turned out farmers buy Piper Cubs and helicopters. And instead of congregating at the grandstand or Midway, the serious-minded younger generation flocks to the stock show buildings and industrial exhibits, reports Phil Stong.

"A new machine shown at the fair may affect the working hours and the production of millions of farmers throughout the whole Missouri Valley," he points out, and he should know. His grandfather helped start the fair almost a century ago. He himself is author of the novel, "State Fair," which he helped to film in 1932 on the site.

Holiday skips lightly from the Midwest to such topics as Venice, Normandy, antiques and mackerel fishing. Perhaps the most interesting piece in it is Vincent Sheean's on Nehru, "Lord of India's Heart," way back on p. 77.

"PATRIOTISM is not an idle word in Israel; it is a living force in the hearts of the people," says Quentin Reynolds in a story wired to the Woman's Home Companion. "It's '76 in Israel." But the citizens of the world's newest nation are not only willing to die for their country; they are willing to work for it. Reynolds uses two typical families, one in a communal agricultural settlement and the other that of a white-collar worker, to illustrate his point.

The problem of freedom is set in its historic background by F. Cyril James in the Annals of the American Academy of Political Science. "The Unfinished Struggle for Human Freedom" is both encouraging and a challenge to our generation to be worthy of the Anglo-Saxon tradition to which this Nation's history makes such a great contribution.

A FORMER follower of Henry Wallace attacks him bitterly in the Atlantic Monthly. "Only a handful of Wallace's former associates are with him in his present crusade," claims Gardner (Pat) Jackson. "A majority of the others . . . have lost confidence in him." Jackson cites one instance after another where he considers that Wallace sacrificed principle to expediency, where he reversed his position or condoned collectivism.

One of the most remarkable statements is quoted in the refutation made by C. B. (Beanie) Baldwin, Wallace's campaign manager. As an example of Wallace's grasp of political realities, he tells of a discussion they had about the stand the Wallace people have taken against the liberal Paul Douglas in the Illinois senatorial race. "Beanie," said Wallace, "we can't deal with lesser evils." Anyway, Douglas is no longer a liberal, says Baldwin, because he has atacked the "New Party."

Also in the Atlantic, Edward Kennedy defends himself for breaking the surrender story in "I'd Do It Again." Correspondents had been sworn to secrecy only until Supreme Headquarters had released the story and, in effect SHAEF had released it, Kennedy claims.

Echoes and Old Faces Are Haunting Wallace

who would approach a dictator "hat in hand," tried hard here to wrap about himself the mantle of F. D. R.

Could he be unaware that, in 1940 and 1941, the very persons described above, who are so close to him now, were describing President Roosevelt—and Mrs. Roosevelt—as a Fascist and an imperialist, a tool of Wall Street?

Maybe the Progressive Party nominee does not realize he is picking up some of the wartime terminology of his associates when he describes President Truman, Senator Vandenberg and others as neo-Fascists, but the echo is there.

The echo is not surprising, after all. The Communist Party set up the American Peace Mobilization for a very obvious Stalinist purpose. The Communist Party also made the creation of a third party its objective, too. Wallace himself says that the Communists claim credit for the Progressive Party every few days, a fact which he finds "a political liability."

The Communist interest in starting such a party goes back, as Americans for Democratic Action have pointed out, to 1945. It was then that Jacques Duclos, the French Communist leader, broke Earl Browder as head of the Communist Party in this country, partly because Browder policies would end "in liquidation of the independent political party of the working class in the United States."

In the summer of 1946, the national committee of the Communist Party met in special plenum and decided, "recent political developments make it incumbent upon us Communists more effectively to promote the movement for a new people's party."

And as early as January, 1947, the Communists were writing about and thinking about Wallace as the leader of that party.

It was not until May, 1947, that Wallace gave even a faint nibble to show his interest.

A 'First' for PCA

FINALLY, in December, 1947, the national board of the Progressive Citizens of America split wide open over the issue of Wallace and the new party. Dr. Frank Kingdon, PCA co-chairman resigned, and publicly said:

"Who asked Henry Wallace to run? The answer is in the record. The Communist Party, through William Z. Foster and Eugene Dennis—were the first."

PCA was the second organized group to demand that Wallace run. The Communist Party made its final decision a little earlier—in October of 1947.

Shortly after PCA called upon him to run, Wallace announced his candidacy in Chicago. It had barely been announced, when there were loud huzzahs in Moscow.

On January 8, for example, the Moscow News said, "All friends of peace will welcome Henry Wallace's political platform." Assumedly, the Moscow News was talking about the platform to be adopted by the convention here today.

The way Stalinists operate, it's possible to congratulate in January on a platform to be adopted the following July.

The Red Star, official publication of the Soviet army, was a little slower in applauding Wallace's candidacy. It was not until April that it congratulated the candidate nominated here yesterday. The Red Star said Wallace's candidacy should help "to unify and solidify the front of progressive forces."

There's one thing apparent. The convention did nothing to remove the Communist coloration of the Progressive Party only made it more apparent.

MARY SPARGO is a Vermonter who came to Washington in 1940.

The daughter of John Spargo, noted writer and historian, she started her newspaper career as a reporter on her home town newspaper, The Bennington (Vt.) Evening Banner, in 1929.

Deeply interested in politics and in the legislative process, Miss Spargo realized a lifelong ambition when she began to cover the Capitol for The Washington Post six years ago.

Before joining the National Bureau of The Washington Post, Miss Spargo was a general correspondent and reporter for many newspapers, including the Boston Post, the Boston Globe and the New York Daily News.

In 1940 her story concerning the arrival in the United States of the victims of the Athenia sinking was included in "Headlining America," the Frank Luther Mott compilation of 100 best stories of the year.

For a few months, during the period of the Commu-Nazi pact, Miss Spargo was an investigator for the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

In private life, Mrs. William Sherman Pryor, she is the mother of a 14-year-old daughter, Mary.

Reds Getting Jump on U. S. In Textbooks

IF communism whips democracy in Germany, it will be in part because Russia got there "fustest with the mostest" in the Battle of the Books.

All figures, of course, coming from beyond the Iron Curtain are suspect. But the most conservative estimates seem to imply that Russia is furnishing more than six times as many textbooks for German students as are being furnished by the United States.

Are we ashamed of democracy? Are we afraid of the printed word? Or are we so smug we think our philosophy of life speaks for itself?

In any case, Russia furnishes the 3,300,000 pupils in her zone with about 27 million highly "Sovietized" textbooks. England comes next with 13 million books for 3,700,000 pupils. Even the French supply more textbooks than we do: they have sent six million books for a mere 900,000 pupils. The United States brings up the rear with a shameful 4,400,000 books for 2,700,000 students.

It is a tough enough job to turn little Nazis into world citizens in a nation still boiling with militant nationalism and vestigial national socialism. Liberal teachers with Western ideas are virtually nonexistent. The least our blundering bureaucracy can do is to furnish sufficient textbooks.

Freud's Seven Rings

FROM the last surviving member of the "Seven Rings" comes a facinating little item about the late Sigmund Freud.

The father of psychoanalysis always wore a favorite seal ring of engraved semiprecious stone. To six of his most intimate friends and associates he gave similar rings: Karl Abraham, Max Eitingen, Ferenczi, Otto Rank, Dr. Hanns Sachs and Ernest Jones.

Dr. Jones, last surviving member of the "Seven Rings," and the man who flew to Vienna to save Freud and his family from the Nazis, has just written the preface to a new edition of Hamlet (Vision Press). He calls this introduction, "The Problem of Hamlet and the Oedipus Complex," a subject in which he has been delving since Freud introduced him to it in a seminar class in Vienna in 1904.

Juliet Lowell's "Dear Mr. Congressman" (Duell, Sloan & Pearce; $1) has been called the "most amusing little book of the season"

Poor Congressman

MOST amusing little book of the season is "Dear Mr. Congressman," compiled by Juliet Lowell, author of "Dear Sir." Many of these actual letters are of the "Dear Sir: You cur!" variety, including a little lulu which reads, "Do something; you fool."

But others show the pitiful faith of hopeless people in what they firmly believe is the omnipotence of government:

"Please do something about our house—the roof leaks." . . . "Thank you so much for the baby book you sent me. . . Am I pregnant again?". . . . "They tell me that Congress is one of our best institutions. Would you tell me what I have to do to get into it as I have spent most of my life in institutions." . . . . "In how many States is sex illegal?" . . . . "My butcher overcharges ten cents a pound on hamburger and besides he is secretly going out with my neighbor's wife. Is this unconstitutional?"

But the one I like best is, "How many members compromise the House of Representatives?" Well, how many members are there, anyway?"—STERLING NORTH

Anne Carroll Story Stretches Credulity

The Union's Unknown Joan of Arc

By Sterling North

WOMAN WITH A SWORD: The Biographical Novel of Anne Carroll, Unofficial Member of Lincoln's Cabinet. By Hollister Noble. Doubleday. 395 pp. $3.

DO YOU believe:

That a pretty young woman, virtually unmentioned in any history of the Civil War, conceived the "Tennessee Plan" which Lincoln secretly accepted over the flat rejection of General McClellan?

That to accept the plan Lincoln removed Simon Cameron as Secretary of War and supplanted him with his bitter political enemy, Edwin McMasters Stanton?

That Stanton agreed to accept the post only if given a free hand to execute the young woman's brilliant plan?

That Lincoln, against the advice of his Cabinet, agreed to declare himself Commander-in-Chief so that he could directly operate her plan?

That gunboats were sent up the Tennessee to capture Forts Henry and Donelson at the behest of this unknown, one-woman war department?

That Grant's push against Vicksburg was part of her plan?

That the capture of Island 10 by digging a canal behind the island was her idea?

That, in short, this young woman saved the Union cause in the black year 1862?

And that ever since there has been a deep-dyed conspiracy of silence to keep her from becoming the most fabulous military leader of her sex since Joan of Arc?

Just in case I had missed something in my reading of Civil War history, I made quick search through 50-odd volumes on Lincoln and the Civil War in my own library. I found exactly one reference to Anne Carroll of Carrolltown, daughter of a Governor of Maryland, who, according to Hollister Noble, rescued in the nick of time the collapsing Northern fortunes.

On page 410, Volume 1, of "Lincoln . . . The War Years," by Carl Sandburg, there is mention of an intelligent and attractive young woman by this name who wrote a pamphlet entitled, "The War Powers of Government," bolstering the President's supreme power in time of war. But not a mention of the "Tennessee Plan."

And yet I am more than half convinced that the basic facts behind this sensational Civil War novel are the truth. Fantastic as it may seem, one cannot brush off the substance of eight extensive congressional documents dated from 1870 to 1881 presenting the testimony of Senators, judges and Army generals concerning Miss Carroll's right to at least the pension of a major general for life.

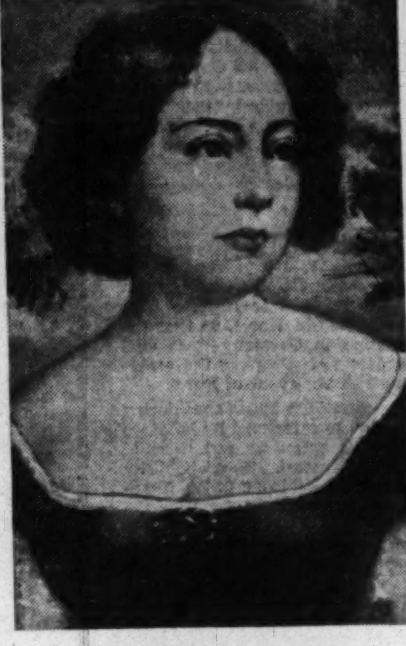
And it is certainly a shrewd guess on the part of the author that Robert Todd Lincoln, who was guilty of other high-handed destruction of Lincoln papers, burned the Lincoln-Carroll correspondence.

This is not a great historical novel. Too often the author overdramatizes his dialogue. He has dragged in a couple of love affairs which may or may not have been justified by history. Often his people speak, literally, in italics. And to bolster his theme, the author protests too much.

On the other hand he has avoided the blood, lust and gore which besplatter so many cheap historical thrillers these days. There are no purple passages. And only a fraction of the reader's time is taken up with the personal trivia and emotions of the heroine.

Actually this book should have been written as nonfiction. If the facts are accurate, it needs no novelization to make it steadily climb the best seller list.

I should like very much to discover what my old friends Carl Sandburg and Lloyd Lewis think of this one. It is a problem for the Civil War experts, who doubtless will write thousands of words about the precise extent to which Anne Carroll's claims are valid.



A portrait of Anne Carroll of Carrollton, from Hollister Noble's "Woman With a Sword"

TOLSTOY AS I KNEW HIM. My Life at Home and at Yasnaya Polyana. By Tatyana A. Kuzminskaya. 439 pp. $5.

THIS is undoubtedly the most tender and revealing portrait in print of Count Leo Tolstoy as a young man at the height of his powers as a novelist and at the peak of his happiness as a young husband.

Tatyana (sister of Liza, whom Tolstoy courted, and Sonya, whom he married) was a particular favorite of the young count. He accompanied her on the piano, once carried her across a stream on his back, romped with her, teased her, wrote affectionate letters to her, and for 25 years insisted that she "come with the swallows" to his estate, Yasnaya Polyana—virtually the author's second home.

Fortunately this young sister-in-law of the great Russian writer was herself a woman of considerable literary ability, as this warm memoir attests. She seems to have observed minutely, remembered vividly and recorded with unassuming simplicity almost every detail an admirer of "War and Peace" might wish to know.

For instance, Tatyana was given a big doll and a little serf girl for her tenth birthday. In a ceremony attended by many aristocratic friends in Moscow, she held a mock wedding for the doll, never knowing that the doll would figure prominently in Tolstoy's writing.

A clue of importance to the original models for Vera and Natasha Rostova (those excellently portrayed women in "War and Peace") comes in a chapter entitled, "Sonya's story." Years before Tolstoy started creating those charming protagonists, his wife-to-be had set down their principal characteristics in a story about herself, her mother, her sister, Tolstoy and the rest of their circle.

Here we find excellent evidence that Tatyana greatly resembled Natasha Rostova—one of Tolstoy's two greatest feminine creations.

Tatyana herself observed from beneath the piano, where she was hiding, a tender scene between Sonya and Leo which later found its way into "Anna Karenina."

Tolstoy playing host. Tolstoy reading aloud passages from the manuscript of "War and Peace.". Tolstoy improvising at the piano. Tolstoy hunting. Tolstoy teaching the peasants at Yasnaya Polyana. Tolstoy confessing his terror when the secret police rifled his home. Tolstoy eating, drinking, joking, making love, riding horseback, coming to visit unannounced—a treasury of anecdotes all set down by a woman who greatly admired the young count and his writings.

It is probably true that Tatyana has been influenced by the almost idyllic mood of Tolstoy's early novels. But it is also undoubtedly true that Tolstoy himself was influenced by the infectious gaiety of Tatyana as well as by the sweet and sentimental nature of Sonya. Thus the girls of the Bers family were as influential in his life as he was in theirs.

The innumerable pet names and variations, plus the confusing patronymics used in this memoir, may occasionally confuse the American reader. Thus on a single page Tolstoy may be called Leo (Lev) Nikolayevich, the "young count," Tolstoy, Lyovochka and perhaps one or two other aliases. Tatyana may be "Madame Tate," Tanechka and anything else that came to mind.

But there is so much to recommend this book as entertainment and as source material on Tolstoy that no reader will regret the time it takes to unravel a few of the Sashas and Sonyas. A brilliant and beautiful little autobiography!

MYSELF WHEN YOUNG. By Henry Handel Richardson. Norton. 214 pp. $3.

THERE is a sharp significance in the title of this incomplete autobiography, taken, I presume, from Edward Fitzgerald's translation of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam:

Myself when young did eagerly frequent
Doctor and Saint, and heard great argument
About it and about; but evermore
Came out by the same door where in I went.

The importance of the title lies not solely in the fact that Ethel F. L. Robertson (who chose to write under the masculine nom de plume of "Henry Handel Richardson) is revealing "herself when young." She also "came out by the same door where in she went."

She is saying that her novels from "Maurice Guest" to "The Young Cosima" came in part from personal experience which virtually dictated the nature of the characters and plot—

That the tragedy of the young musician who lacked the talent to succeed in "Maurice Guest" is in essence her own tragedy in the realm of music—

That the abnormal love of a schoolgirl for another schoolgirl in "The Getting of Wisdom" reveals her own strange affair with a feminine roommate at a Presbyterian college in Australia—

And finally that the famous trilogy concerning "The Fortunes of Richard Mahoney" was a variation on her father's own story as a physician who went to seek his fortune in Australia.

This is a very self-conscious and egocentric memoir which seeks to excuse and explain a life more fascinating to the woman who lived it than to the reader.

The author's father died when she was young. It was many years before she tried to understand his tragedy. Her mother slaved and slaved to support her in Australia and to educate her as a concert pianist at Leipzig. But the author did not believe that burdens should be carried by "young shoulders," so she let her mother accept martyrdom rather than aid her in any way.

After she married Prof. J. G. Robertson, the all-kneeling husband who writes his slightly embarrassing critical appendix to this book, she continued to be pampered to the date of her death.

None of Henry Handel Richardson's precious books excuse her continuously precious attitude toward herself. Her husband's touching attempts to put her in a bracket with Dostoevsky, Stendal and Flaubert prove nothing but the occasional blindness of monogamous infatuation.

But all of this should not dissuade you from reading "Australia Felix," "The Way Home" and "Ultima Thule," the Richardson trilogy which despite this postscript is well worthy of your attention.

Machen Is Already Folklore

A Romantic Plumbs Primordial Evil

TALES OF HORROR AND THE SUPERNATURAL. By Arthur Machen. Knopf. 427 pp. $4.95.

PERHAPS you have among your own first editions one of those "yellow-bound volumes with purple labels" which inclose the magic of Arthur Machen.

During the 1920s, due principally to the enthusiasm of Carl Van Vechten and Vincent Starrett, Machen had a short but intense vogue in this country. Single copies of his books often sold for more money than Machen made from his writing in any year from 1881 to 1922.

Machen lived on to 1947, fortunately supported in his later years by a pension from the King. Like several of his stories (particularly "The Bowmen"), he had already passed into the realm of folklore long before his death.

A lonely man in his youth, who loved his native Wales with its tradition of the shadowy Celts and the Romans and hated London, Machen burrowed into the archives and into his own subconscious to produce stories which were diabolical and charming. Admitting his debt to Robert Louis Stevenson, he soon outgrew the Stevenson influence and developed his own inimitable style.

Throughout his life the author seems to have been obsessed with the idea that civilization is a paper-thin veneer; that beneath the polite facade lies limitless and primordial evil.

There was no dark forest which did not suggest to his mind the fierce revelry of the Witches' Sabbath; the paralyzing panic which mortals feel when they glimpse the Great God Pan.

Machen had no belief in revenants; he did not dabble in the usual forms of spiritualism. He was groping back to earlier and more frightening traditions. And he was usually able to charm his readers into that "willing suspension of disbelief" which makes such flights of fancy possible.

"The Black Seal," with which this collection of Machen opens, bolsters the folk fear that the "little people" are in truth the infinitely evil remnants of an older race (as the ethnologist Professor Gregg discovers to his own mortal peril).

"The White Powder" suggests that were we capable of finding the drug used in preparing the Vinum Sabbati which was drunk at the Witches' Sabbath, we could reduce man through a terrifying devolution to the slime from which he evolved. (Don't read this one in a Charles Addams house late at night if you wish to preserve your sanity.)

ARTHUR MACHEN
. . . Penetrated the veneer

"The Great God Pan" is a more involved and somewhat less believable story of a daughter of Pan rampant in London. The wave of suicides among the young gallants who share her favors sounds a trifle naive in the light of the Kinsey report.

Faith in evil, as most students of "decadent" literature realize, is in truth merely an inversion of faith in God. At least it is a faith. Thus Poe, Baudelaire, the Yellow Book writers at the turn of the century in England, and men like Machen often had strong streaks of a more acceptable religion running through their diabolism. Huysmans wrote glowingly of the Black Mass and then died in the Church. Machen, who had an imagination like some Walpurgis night dream, ended life a stanch Anglican Catholic.

But he was one of the last of the romantics (for to be a romantic one must have some sort of faith). It is belief in neither good nor evil which produces utter cynicism.

There will probably never again be another writer like Arthur Machen. Science and pragmatism have chased away the shining archers crying, "St. George! St. George!", whose flights of arrows succored the hard-pressed Tommies of the First World War as they fought with their backs to the sea. S. N.

No. 2 Existentialist Tailors Characters to Fit Philosophy

THE BLOOD OF OTHERS, by Simone de Beauvoir, translated by Roger Senhouse and Yvonne Moyse (Knopf; $3).

HOW, with the help of the crushing defeat of one's country, to become an existentialist . . . that is the theme of this novel. Written by France's No. 2 existentialist, and already three years old, this is the story of Jean Blomart, his mistress Helene, and the impact of historic events on them.

Jean, son of a rich man, runs away from home to throw in his lot with the workers, first the Communists and then the trade unionists. He is obsessed with "the sin of being another being"; he yearns with all his heart to be an isolated individual; live and let live is his philosophy.

Helene is carefree and irresponsible, almost too irresponsible for anyone outside a story book. At the start of the novel she thinks she may be in love with Paul, but soon decides Jean is the man she really must have, and she offers him her heart. He tries to say no to her, because he doesn't love her, and has more important things to do, and because at bottom he does not want his personality to make any impress on her.

But he learns that he can't even reject her without influencing her; he learns, too, regretfully, that to kiss her means to betray Paul and to hurt his friend Madeleine. In other words, he does not live in a vacuum; he is the pebble thrown into the pond; the ripples spread out and he can't stop them. Even though he takes no stand, the world beats at his door.

Miss de Beauvoir takes a sound thesis and develops it understandingly. But I have the uneasy feeling that she's trying to prove something and hasn't elevated her proof to the status of fiction; the characters are tailored to fit the philosophy. Helene on her deathbed, where she stays obligingly throughout the book, does not draw tears to my eyes, nor to Jean's really.—W. G. ROGERS.

Bambi's Creator Adopts a Kitten

JIBBY THE CAT. Felix Salten. 177 pp. Julian Messner. $2.50.

FELIX SALTEN, whose "Bambi" has charmed thousands, has turned his pen to the life story of a cat, "Jibby."

There is Peter, the boy who found Jibby in the river, where as a kitten she had been thrown to drown, and his father, Julius, a farmer whose attitude toward animals is strictly utilitarian. There is also Victor, the gentle schoolmaster, who loves pets, and Pauline, his understanding wife.

Salten's story has a hazy unreality to it, but it will nevertheless please readers young and old. L. G.

Hank Wallace Sized Up by An Admirer

MEET HENRY WALLACE, by James Waterman Wise (Boni & Gaer; paper $1, cloth $2.50).

JUST in time for the New Party campaign, here's a simply written biography, or biographical summary, of the candidate, his record and his aspirations.

Wise believes Wallace alone offers a leadership comparable to Roosevelt's, characterized by "human wisdom, moral determination, courageous action." Then he gives the reasons for his conviction:

Born in Iowa in 1888, experimenter with "hi-bred" corn seed for which he built up a sizable market, editor of Wallace's Farmer and the Iowa Homestead, Wallace entered politics for the first time when he became FDR's Secretary of Agriculture in 1933. His eight years in that post produced the AAA and, after it was declared unconstitutional, the programs for soil conservation, crop control, resettlement, farm loans, rural electrification.

"Old man common sense," as the leader of his party and country affectionately dubbed him, was elected Vice President in 1940, was rejected for that second place in 1944 and was made Secretary of Commerce as successor to his arch critic, Jesse Jones. There followed the letter about atomic energy control, and the disagreement with Baruch, then the Madison Square Garden speech, the disagreement with Byrnes and resignation by request.

Wise says Wallace as candidate favors cooperation with Russia, relief and reconstruction aid for countries impoverished by the war and, at home, a "secure and prosperous" America, the protection and extension of labor's rights, a guaranteed annual wage and $1 per hour minimum; he opposes Jim Crow, the Taft-Hartley Law, the Mundt-Nixon bill and the Un-American Activities Committee.

The book contains photos, and lengthy quotes from Wallace's speeches, papers and books.

The new novel by

THE CITADEL,
THE GREEN YEARS

DR. CRONIN'S The Citadel was the soul-searching story of a man who tried to be a good doctor but was tempted by his desire for material success. Shannon's Way is the story of a doctor in his twenties who put his keen interest in medical research ahead of everything else in life.

Here, as in all of Dr. Cronin's novels he shows his extraordinary abilities as a storyteller and his sympathetic understanding of human frailties and emotions. To read this exultant novel is a heart-stirring and richly rewarding experience.

A DRAMATIC court battle for possession of an eight-million-dollar investment in an American industrial firm is being quietly unfolded here.

The action involves some of the top names in Swedish and international circles and has ramifications extending to many parts of Europe. At stake is the ownership and control of the American Bosch Co., a Springfield, Mass., firm, important in the production of automobile and aircraft accessories.

The issue is who really owns 535,000 shares, or 77 per cent, of the outstanding stock of the company and its wartime dividends, all held by the Alien Property Custodian. The total value is about eight million dollars.

The Government last Wednesday accepted a $6,044,748 bid for the stock from the Amra Corp. of New York, manufacturers of electronic devices. The balance of the eight million dollars involved represents accrued dividends.

The Stockholms Enskilda Bank, Aktiebolag, one of the leading international financial institutions in Europe, and two of its affiliates, Aktiebolaget Vargos and Svenska Aktiebolaget Caritas, all of the same street address in Stockholm, contended in a complaint filed in District Court here June 14, 1946, that they own the shares and want the proceeds.

The Alien Property Custodian's staff characterized the two affiliates as "desk drawer corporations living in the desk of the bank" and charged the bank with taking part in a "cloaking" deal to hide actual German ownership of the stock during the war in return for a $650,000 fee.

The Swedish firms, the Government lawyers contend, have disqualified themselves by aiding the Germans, and the shares should be sold and receipts turned over to the United States Treasury.

The case will come up for trial in District Court early in 1949. Depositions from top foreign witnesses on both sides are now being taken in sessions at the Justice Department Building.

Melodramatic Props

THE case has turned up some almost Hollywood-like angles, such as secret documents with five wax seals, papers hidden behind false brick walls and complicated intrigue to preserve investments in wartime.

The principals in the controversy are:

The late Robert A. Bosch, 80-year-old German inventor, industrialist and founder of a world-wide network of sales and manufacturing firms. His magnetos, spark plugs, lamps, horns and fuel injection equipment for Diesel engines were well-known. He died at Stuttgart, headquarters of his empire, in 1942.

Marcus and Jacob Wallenberg, brothers who head the Stockholm bank, and through it are active in many industries throughout the world. The Wallenberg family has been a financial power for generations.

DR. THOMA

J. WALLENBERG

Rolf Calissendorff, a manager of the bank during the period under discussion. He came here March 28, gave 1500 pages of testimony and returned to Sweden last week.

Dr. Karl Eugen Thoma, chief of the legal division of Robert Bosch, G. m. b. H., principal defense witness. He came here February 14 at the request of the American Government and has been giving a lengthy deposition outlining the alleged negotiations between Bosch and the bank.

The bank's counsel, which comprises former North Carolina Judge N. A. Townsend, local attorney, and the New York law firm of Sullivan & Cromwell, headed by John Foster Dulles, foreign affairs adviser to Presidential Candidate Thomas E. Dewey. Representing the firm during the deposition-taking is Inzer B. Wyatt as trial attorney.

The Government counsel, headed by John L. Burling, who, by coincidence, began his law career in Dewey's office when the latter was district attorney in New York. Associated with Burling are three other attorneys in the litigation section of APC: Jack Abramson, Abe Weissbrodt and E. Ernest Goldstein.

No Postwar 'Strings'

THE bank's position in the case, as outlined by a counsel, is that although Bosch interests in several European countries were sold to the Swedish bank under an arrangement whereby they would be returned after the war at a stated figure, that plan was not followed in the case of the American firm. It was an outright sale with "no strings attached," he declared.

Dulles, senior active partner in Sullivan & Cromwell, told The Washington Post the firm had been legal counsel for the bank for 20 years. Dulles said he was not connected with the case personally and had made only one inquiry in connection with it.

He said that after James E. Markham, then Alien Property Custodian, seized the ABC shares in May, 1942, Dulles inquired whether continued legal representation by his firm would be "contrary to the public interest." Markham told him it would not, Dulles reported.

One of his associates, asked to comment on defense charges, said that "the plaintiffs have made no attempt to control or influence the management of ABC, made no attempt to recover their stock during the war, cooperated with the Alien Property Custodian during the war, and, as soon as they understood that the custodian desired to place the stock in the hands of American citizens, consented to a sale of their shares, reserving only their rights to continue this litigation against the proceeds."

The Swedish bank produced a copy of a printed voting trust agreement under which George Murnane, an American who was formerly chairman of the board of ABC, is named voting trustee for the 535,000 shares during the war. This was done to confide the firm's affairs exclusively to an American directorate and management during the war emergency, the agreement declared. In case the voting trustee should cease to act in that capacity, Dulles was authorized to select a successor.

The bank also submitted documents purportedly proving the sale of the American stock to the Swedish bank and its affiliates. These have been attacked by the Government as used "pursuant to a conspiracy to defraud the United States of America by concealing the true beneficial ownership of the shares by nationals of Germany and thereby to prevent seizure thereof in the event of war, and the alleged notes and pledges were sham, fraudulent and unlawful . . ."

A Lesson of 1917

THE Government's version of the negotiations, as recorded in District Court docket files, is that the predecessor firm to ABC was vested during World War I, so that the Bosch headquarters in Germany "was well aware of the problem of seizure by the American Government in the event of war."

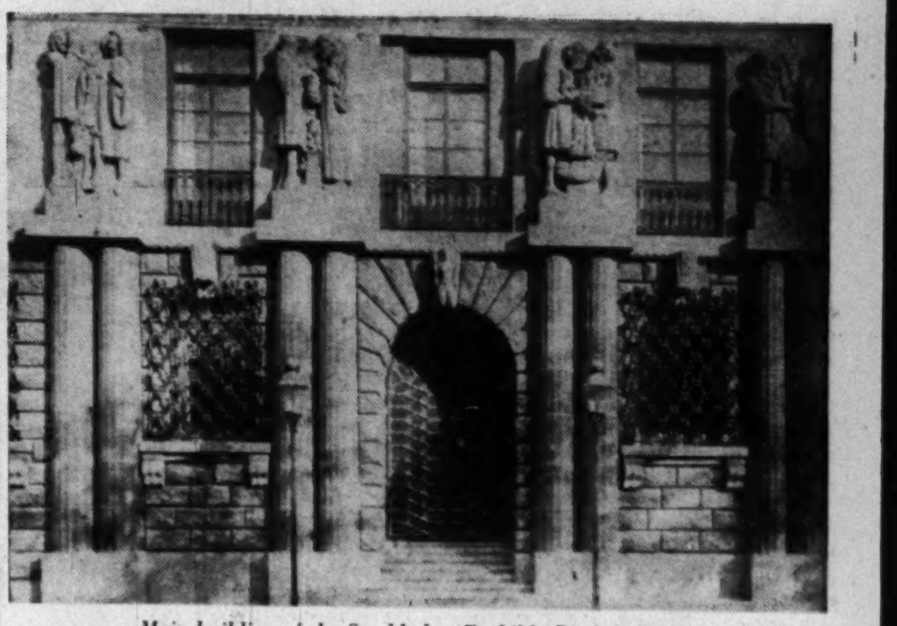
German Bosch therefore began considering who could be hired to safeguard its holdings until World War II was over and it could return to business as usual. These holdings were in the hands of Nakib (a Dutch financial firm reported to have held them for the Bosch interests).

After discussing several possibilities, negotiations were begun with the Stockholm bank, and on December 5, 1939, an agreement was completed covering 10 Bosch firms in Belgium, Spain, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Argentina and Switzerland (two holding companies, a sales unit and a manufacturing firm in the last named).

Later "protocols" brought the American firm under the same agreement, the Alien Property Custodian's legal battery contends. These documents were allegedly drawn up by Dr. Thoma and other representatives of Bosch and by officials of the Stockholm bank on July 22, 1940.

The paper referring to the American plant, which employs about 2300 persons and was active in war production, was not signed or initialed, nor was the identity of the bank disclosed, but both parties, the defense claims, felt "honor bound" to live up to it. The document was placed in an envelope with five wax seals and was deposited in the trust department of the Stockholm bank.

Shortly thereafter the American Government asked the Swedish government about the real ownership of the American majority shares, and Swedish officials called on the bank for a statement. According to the APC allegation, the bank furnished a letter denying the existence of the "cloaking" agreement.



Main building of the Stockholms Enskilda Bank in Sweden

In fact, "at no time prior to August 1, 1945, did the bank ever divulge, as far as we know, to anyone, and certainly not to the United States Government, the existence of these arrangements, although from 1942 on, counsel for the bank were dealing with the Alien Property Custodian directly," the Government charged.

This implied no attack on the Dulles firm, since the bank manager, Calissendorff, said that "they (bank executives) had never told their story, or at least an important part of their story, to counsel prior to 1945," the Government lawyers noted.

In Bomb Shelter

AND so things stood until the American Army occupied Stuttgart, the Bosch headquarters, and discovered in an air raid shelter, behind an 18-inch-thick fake wall, files which contained duplicate copies of the alleged agreements.

The Wallenberg brothers, upon hearing of the discovery, declared that the Bosch negotiators had requested an option to repurchase the American stock after the war, but "the German option was canceled in 1941, long before the United States entered the war," and therefore their bank was the real owner.

However, "the witness, Thoma, with characteristic German thoroughness, had kept meticulous file memoranda — everything he ever said to the Swedes, so that we know the whole story, and in addition, although the Swedes had destroyed their copy of the written arrangement, the Germans had a copy," the APC staff has declared.

The Government lawyers also have questioned the complete neutrality of the Swedish bank. Several inquiries have been made to determine just what its correspondents in various occupied or enemy countries were up to during the war, and also whether the bank joined some other firms in extending credit to private German parties for the building of naval vessels. If these things were proved, they would indicate "enemy taint" and revoke the right of recovery by the Swedish bank.

On July 8, the Government lawyers went before District Court Justice T. Alan Goldsborough to ask him to order Calissendorff to answer 21 specific questions, some on the matter of the credit for naval construction. The judge directed him to reply to 19 of them.

Next week the taking of a deposition from Dr. Thoma will continue Tuesday to Friday, six hours a day, in the Justice Department Building.

500 Men Will 'Remodel' Md. Farm in Day

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

A FREDERICK COUNTY, Md., farm will be made over August 18 to demonstrate modern farm practices.

More than 55 organizations, State, county and national, are joining in Maryland Conservation Field Day. Chief sponsor is the Maryland State Grange, which through its State leader, Edward F. Holter, suggested the demonstration several months ago.

Similar projects have been held in other States, drawing crowds of from 25,000 to 125,000.

The demonstration will be on the 175-acre farm of Mrs. Nellie V. Thrasher, near Jefferson, Md. The owner, a 53-year-old widow with two teen-age children, has run the farm since the death of her husband two years ago.

The children are George Edward, 17, who quit high school to take over the farm duties when his father died, and Jan Virginia, 15. A sister of Mrs. Thrasher, Miss Amy Lakin, lives with them and aids in the farm work.

In the one day, it is estimated the value of the farm will be increased at least 50 per cent.

A Job, Even for 500

THE demonstration farm was chosen as an "average non-conservation" farm, on the way to becoming a victim of erosion. It was selected after a survey by a committee of four prominent Frederick County farmers, headed by Carl Ingling of Frederick.

More than 500 men will work on the farm from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. In that time they expect to:

1. Construct 4500 feet of diversion terraces.

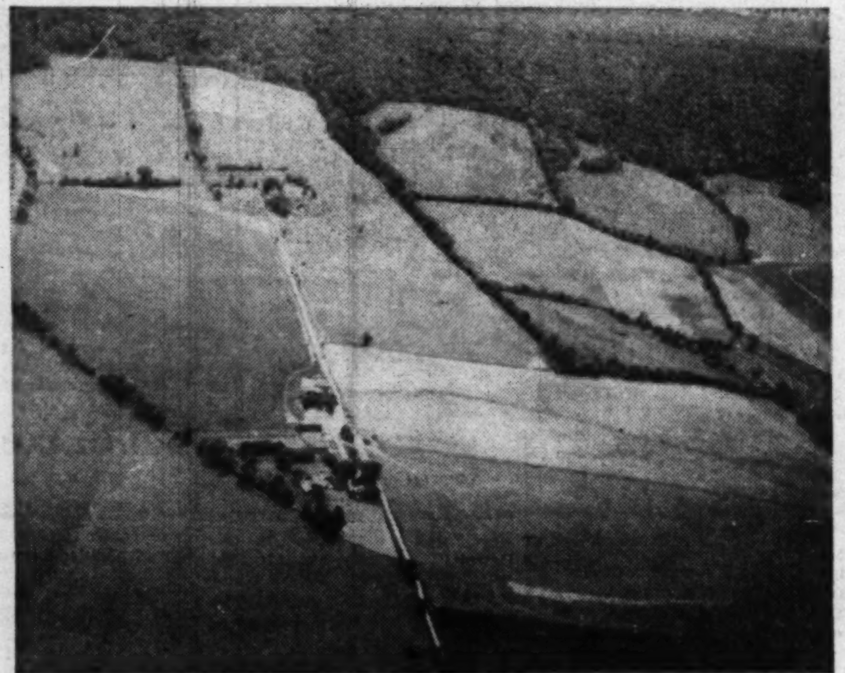
2. Prepare 53 acres and sow it in hay type pasture.

3. Gully-slope the now badly eroded gullies.

4. Prepare 75 acres for strip crops; part of these strips will be plowed and part disced and seeded.

5. Treat 13½ acres of permanent pasture with lime and fertilizer. Ninety-two tons of lime and ground limestone will be applied.

6. Build a pond of approximately an acre.



An aerial view of Mrs. Thrasher's Frederick County Farm

7. Remove all old inside fences, and construct nearly 600 rods of new contour fencing between crop land and pasture land.

In addition, the Maryland Department of State Forests and Parks and the Extension Forestry Service will demonstrate tree planting, selective cutting and the latest sawmill equipment. Modern equipment for control of forest fires will be displayed.

The Maryland Inland Game and Fish Commission will establish a wildlife area, and demonstrate wildlife planting.

A Two-Week Task

A 22-cow dairy barn will be erected. The barn, a quonset-type structure, will be built to the specifications of the Washington, D. C., milkshed. The lower part, of concrete block, will be built before demonstration day; the quonset top, which measures 36x48 feet, will be erected on demonstration day.

Ordinarily, this alone would take four or five men about two weeks. On August 18, 35 men will do it in less than 12 hours.

Plans also call for a lot of work on the house, buildings and grounds, such as repairing, painting, drainage, landscaping and tree surgery.

Twenty-four committeemen have been at work for several weeks making plans for the demonstration. Direction signs, traffic control, parking facilities for 12,000 autos, food and beverage concessions, comfort stations, public telephones and first aid stations will be set up.

Room for 40,000

IN addition to more than 500 volunteer workers—many of them skilled craftsmen—more than 100 pieces of machinery will be used. Businessmen, industries, farm organizations and clubs, cooperatives and other groups have contributed more than $8000 to defray expenses.

A crowd of 40,000 persons can be accommodated under the plans.

Among the speakers on a brief afternoon program will be Agriculture Secretary Charles F. Brannan, J. C. Dykes, assistant chief of the Soil Conservation Service, and Gov. William Preston Lane, jr., of Maryland, Dr. H. C. Byrd, president of the University of Maryland, will preside.

Monthly Journal Is Outlet For the Violently Insane

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

NEWSMEN can believe this or not, but patients at St. Elizabeth's Hospital here are doing newspaper work to REGAIN sanity.

End product is the Howard Hall Journal, brainchild of men committed there as criminally or violently insane.

Begun by the inmates of St. Elizabeth's maximum security wards in mid-March, it now flourishes as a 20-page, mimeographed monthly journal of the thoughts and activities of the patients.

Its editorials, illustrations, humor, poetry, fiction, sports reporting, political comment and chit-chat are prepared and edited by offenders whose deeds include threats against the President, sex perversion and homicide.

The Journal, now an important part of group therapy for the deranged, even gives the patients a chance to poke fun at delusions of fellow inmates, gripe (mildly) about their confinement and write none too subtle testimonials to the attendants.

None of its contents has been written by former newspapermen.

An Idea That Jelled

THE publication, according to Miss Janet Sawyer, occupational therapist at Howard Hall (admittedly a rare assignment for a woman), "evolved normally" during a "gripe session" of patients attending group therapy.

The suggestion by a patient that they get up a newspaper did not take spontaneous hold, she said, adding that "no ideas sweep like fire" in their assemblies.

"Frequently," she explained, "suggestions are made and immediately or soon forgotten. But the newspaper idea took hold and became the pet of the majority. When we found interest was high enough we encouraged the project."

It quickly won approval up the line, from Dr. Joseph Abrahams, in charge of group therapy; Dr. Bernard A. Cruvant, physician in charge of Howard Hall; Dr. Francis J. Tartaglino, clinical director of the psychiatric division, and Dr. Winfred Overholser, superintendent of St. Elizabeth's.

Volume 1, No 1, was published in April.

Its "Personalities" column contained such tidbits as these:

"Best wishes to Mr. Kelly the night attendant in the Hall for his kind and courteous treatment of all patients."

"How about more courtesy from some of the dining room attendants?"

"Say, G, on Hall 8, are you going to tack up any more carpets?"

Apologies to Nats

THE issue's sports writer predicted that the New York Yankees would lead the American League this season, and that the Washington Senators would be last.

Poetry occupies a generous part of the Howard Hall Journal. Perhaps topping its quality is this extract from an 11-stanza poem in the July issue:

"Behind our masks we hide from sight
Strange things that haunt us in the night,
Strange things that hold away our sleep,
That often make us sigh and weep.

"The hidden things that no man saw,
The secret breaking of the law,
The mem'ry of the forbidden things,
That often leaves a bitter sting.

"Of victories lost upon the way,
Of words we had not sense to say,
Of words we said for empty show,
That brought another needless woe."

Bylines are not used. Credit lines giving the contributors' initials are the style.

"We do that so that they remain anonymous except in their own group," explained Dr. Abrahams.

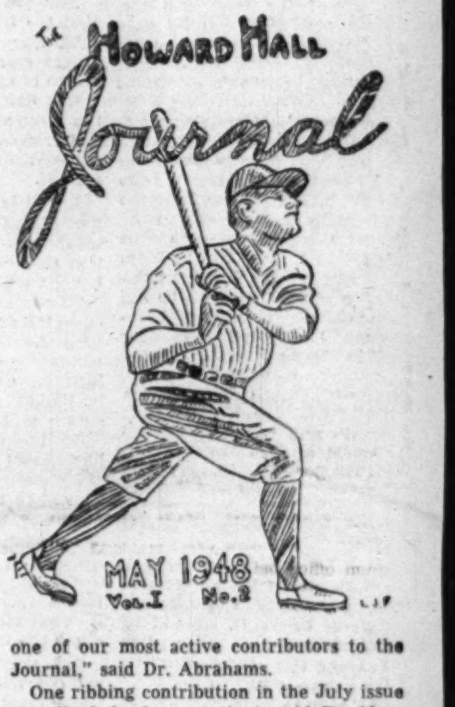
Mute Finds Expression

HE REFUSED to reveal the identity of the writers, some of whom made newspaper headlines by the nature of their crimes, but told of one inmate admitted to Howard Hall as a "mute catatonic."

"He held his head aslant, was semirigid, and mouthed gibberish all the time," said Dr. Abrahams.

But after a week of group therapy classes, the patient "began to take care of himself." At the end of the third week, he walked to the blackboard and wrote, "I want to ask the class—" but was unable to finish.

"In several more weeks, he had become one of our most active contributors to the Journal," said Dr. Abrahams.



One ribbing contribution in the July issue actually helped one patient, said Dr Abrahams. It read: "To——on Hall 7, are you still chasing spirits all over the place? Catch any?"

The jibe caused the patient to explain that he "wasn't seeing ghosts as normal people think of them" but was "seeing" the "animosities" of people with whom he came in contact.

"These people can be awful sensitive," said Dr. Abrahams. "But when he found out we could understand him, he began to show immediate improvement."

Model for Nation

"THERE is a false sense of economy in locking up the mentally ill and leaving them to their own thoughts," said Dr. Cruvant. "It takes fewer attendants, and few trained personnel. But if it means you keep a person 40 years who might be released in several by proper treatment, where is the saving?"

Group therapy was begun at St Elizabeth's in October, 1946, and its results are being studied by mental hospital superintendents throughout the country. Besides preparing the Journal, Howard Hall's 170 to 180 inmates also do shop work, play sports, have art sessions and even play bridge.

The 'Fat' Greeks Are Just Logy From Potatoes

By Adrienne Tassler
Post Reporter

THE Greeks, whose "Golden Age" is a cultural high water mark in American textbooks, are a fear-ridden people today.

Hunger. . . death. . . and the Russians—these are the ogres of 1948 to once glorious Athens, says a Washingtonian just returned from there.

MISS CLAYTON

Miss Sybella Clayton, of the Presidential Apartments, who spent a year in the ancient city as secretary to one of the chiefs of the United States aid mission, carried away an admiration for the "average" Greek and a feeling of new optimism for his future.

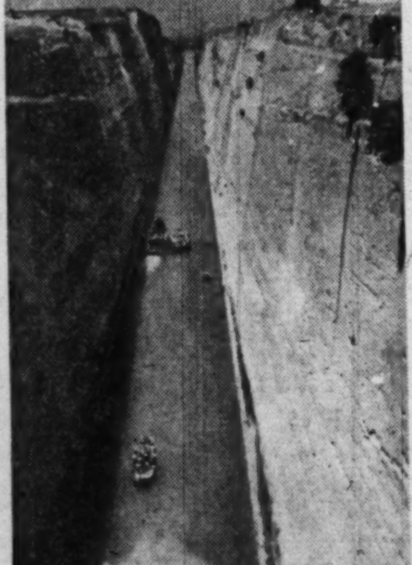
But while a year of American help has produced tangible improvements, the Greek "in the street" is still like a "sick person who has just begun his convalescence—and he's mighty afraid of a relapse," she said.

"Their appearance is deceiving. They seem well fed—but they're just heavy, from potatoes, bread and olive oil. And they can't seem to stop eating, mostly because they have known starvation and fear it terribly."

The black market still thrives, she reported, and despite American efforts the value of the drachma has tobogganed from 140,000 to a gold pound to 233,000.

Housing is tight, she said, and it is not unusual to discover whole families lodging overnight in the street.

There is a strong hatred of communism in Athens, Miss Clayton said, and an equally potent love for democracy. Except for their "disappointment that we don't all look like movie stars," most Greeks are very pleased with the Americans.



The reopened Corinth Canal, one of the tangible fruits of American aid to Greece. It cuts the coastwise voyage almost in half, and the retreating Germans blocked its exists with sunken ships and its channel with earth

Among the tangible results of the United States program, she noted, is the reconstruction of the Corinth Canal, the Salonika and Piraeus quays and the Athens highways.

Miss Clayton, 26, is the daughter of Lawrence Clayton, member of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System. She left for Greece last July, shortly after graduating from George Washington University.

Czechs Aren't Three-Sheeting The New Master

By Gaston Coblentz

PRAGUE, July 24—The ubiquitous portraits of the chiefs of state, usually displayed by totalitarian regimes, are still strikingly absent here.

A man from Mars might walk through the heart of Prague without knowing the city was under rigid Communist control. He would see scarcely any photographs of the Czech Communist President, Klement Gottwald; of the Premier, Antonin Zapotocky, or any of the normal surface panoply of a totalitarian state.

Communist symbols, such as the red star and the hammer and sickle, are almost completely absent from shop windows and restaurants on the Prikipy, on National Avenue and in Wenceslaus Square.

The most extravagant Communist display in the heart of Prague is a neon sign which says, "Czechoslovak Communist Party," in foot-high letters on the party's headquarters on the Prikipy. Above the sign is a red star enclosing a green hammer and sickle. The whole display is framed in blue and red neon bands the length and height of the four-story building.

The sign is a little brighter than that of the Sevastopol movie house next door.

The only prominent picture of any government leader in the center of the city is a large photograph of Marshal Tito in a bemedaled uniform in the show window of the Yugoslav Information Bureau. The absence of totalitarian paraphernalia is also striking in many offices of minor government officials.

In the office of ranking officials there is more often than not a picture of Gottwald above the desk, occasionally accompanied by a photograph of Stalin. But in the offices of the rank and file, many of whom joined the Communist Party hastily in February, there is often only one portrait on the wall—that of Dr. Eduard Benes, who resigned as President last month.

West Puzzled by Reds' Nod to Danube Parley

By Clarke Beach
Associated Press Staff Writer

WESTERN diplomats probably will be in for a rough session when they meet the Russian orbit delegates next Friday to try to agree on how to reestablish free navigation on the Danube.

For one thing, they will be outnumbered for the first time in a major postwar conference when they assemble at Belgrade, Yugoslavia. The line-up: The United States, France and Britain versus the Soviet Union, the Ukrainian S. S. R., Bulgaria, Romania, Yugoslavia, Hungary and Czechoslovakia. Austria will sit in as observer.

Secondly, Russia apparently now has everything her own way in the lower Danube basin, with the river tightly closed.

The Danube is the chief means of travel and transport in that part of Europe, where highways and railroads are sketchy at best. It would mean an enormous advantage to the Western democracies to restore normal trade and cultural contacts with the Danubian states behind the Iron Curtain.

Many observers here were astonished that Russia even considered joining in the Belgrade talks. What can she gain by it?

There are various possibilities:

1. She may be badly squeezed in her barter treaties with the Danubian satellites, which give her raw materials in exchange for fabricated goods. Russia is notoriously short of industrial products and cannot comfortably export any of them.

2. Russia may be showing willingness to help her satellites. If the conference were stalemated, she might say that she had proved that trade with the West was not feasible.

3. Russia by now has so thoroughly sewed up all commercial operations in the area that she may feel the Western powers could not trade profitably there and thus could make no inroads.

4. Russia did of course have a diplomatic obligation to hold this conference. In the peace treaties with Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania she agreed to the principle of free navigation on the Danube. And in a resolution of the Council of Foreign Ministers in December, 1946, she agreed to confer on reestablishing an international river regime.

There is no law now against outside trading on the Danube, but as a practical matter no non-Communist states can do so. The Russians do not allow Western vessels to sail below Linz, Austria, so the Americans have forbidden the Russians to go above there.

Vessels of non-Danubian nations, immobilized on the river ever since the start of the war, are not specifically prohibited from operating. But they have found it impossible to do so because of "technicalities."

Indirect Gains

WHAT would the opening of the Danube mean to us? It would be of no direct commercial advantage. The United States has never carried on much trade in that area.

The chief reason our Government is interested is to prevent the Danubian states from being wholly absorbed in the Russian orbit. Officials say a lot of people in those countries dream of the day when they can trade the way they used to and conduct their own affairs.

At Belgrade we can state our purposes, show our friendly interest, and even if the conference fails we shall have had a sounding board for America's democratic message.

Here are some other reasons why we want the river opened:

1. Increased trade between eastern and western Europe is an important element of the Marshall Plan for European recovery.

2. We could save money if we could make our occupied areas of Austria and Germany self-supporting through the resumption of normal trade.

3. The Greeks, another American liability, could be aided directly. They have always been among the chief traders on the Danube.

4. Not really important, but annoying, is the fact that in order to get coal and other supplies into Vienna, the capital of Austria, we now have to unload our barges at Linz and ship the cargoes overland.

Soviet Steel Output Soars in Six Months

By Tom Whitney
Associated Press Staff Writer

MOSCOW, July 24.—The first half of 1948 has seen startling progress in the reconstruction of the Soviet steel industry, official figures indicate.

In five months the steel mills of the south and center, including the great factories of the Ukraine which produced nearly two-thirds of the nation's prewar steel, have upped their output of pig iron by 61 per cent, of steel by 81 per cent and of rolled steel by 90 per cent.

Nor is that all. New steel and pig iron capacity has been going into production in the last month at a more rapid rate than at any time since the war.

In view of the rapidity of the reconstruction program, there seems some possibility that in 1949 the Ukraine and the central industrial region may be putting out as much steel as before the war. This is a momentous possibility, since the Soviet economy has been running on short supplies of this basic material since the beginning of the German invasion.

A's Take Lead as Bosox Beat Tribe Twice

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

THE MANAGERIAL SHIFT of Leo Durocher from Brooklyn to the Giants was precedent-setting in one sense: It was the only sports event in history to make the Dow-Jones stock market ticker . . . the voting on the most valuable player in the American League will be merely a formality in September with Player-Manager Lou Boudreau towering above Williams, DiMaggio and all other candidates. All Boudreau is doing is turning in a superb managerial job, leading the club in hitting, and inspiring the Indians with the fanciest shortstopping in the business . . . Ray Evans, the great Kansas back who will join the Pittsburgh Steelers, is getting $21,000 for his first year in the pro league. When he broke in at Kansas he was so modest he refused to call his own signal and it was not until Coach George Sauer sent in a substitute quarterback to call the plays and give the ball to Evans on handoffs that the fellow's full talents were brought to light . . . the Naval Academy's football talent scouts groan that they have a rough lot competing with talent hunters of civilian colleges . . . "Eighty per cent of the high and prep school boys don't take the subjects that would qualify them for entrance to the academy," the Navy's scouts report, "and of the remaining 20 per cent, half won't meet the physical tests. We are reduced to dickering with only the remaining 10 per cent" . . . three major league clubs have made offers for Johnny Sullivan, the Nats' bench-warming shortstop.

POVICH

SO YOU THINK you know baseball? Then account for the fact that in one team's inning 36 men can go to bat, two of them hitting triples and four of them making singles, without scoring a run during the inning . . . give up? . . . look for the answer in this space next Sunday . . both Maryland U. and the Redskins tried to emancipate Fullback Barrington from the Quantico Marine team, but failed. Barrington is such a hot article he kept Joe Bartos, Navy's good fullback for three seasons, on Quantico's second-string team . . . Satchel Paige's last nine-inning pitching job was five years ago. And when League President Will Harridge declared Paige's hesitation delivery to be a balk he was writing, in effect, the thirteenth balk rule in the book. None of the other 12 covered Paige's peculiar wind-up . . . the best show in town Tuesday night will be the All-Brooklyn vs. All-Washington sandlot stars game at Griffith Stadium at 8:30 for a buck-twenty admission . . . when the Yankees beat Bob Feller the other night they became the only club in the league to beat Feller more times than he has licked them. It was the Yanks' twenty-second decision over Feller, against 21 defeats, since 1936 . . . apology to Chuck Klein, whose four homers in one game were hit in Pittsburgh's Forbes Field not in Philadelphia's Baker Bowl, as was reported here.

THE UNITED STATES has not won the Olympic Games' 1500 meter run, Europe's version of the mile, in 40 years . . . tomorrow night's sour notes can be blamed on the big Musicians Golf Tournament of Local 161 that is scheduled earlier in the day at the Indian Spring Club under the aegis of Sam Jack Kaufman . . . the Laurel Trotting track won distinction as the home of the 20-cent hot dog until wiser heads revised the price downward . . . Clark Griffith's heart-to-heart talk with Outfielder Gil Coan in the Stadium office before Friday's game with the Tigers produced quick results with Coan hitting a homer in his second time at bat . . . a newly-patented, steel golf tee adds 14 yards to the distance of the average drives, its inventors claim after a test on a Spalding driving-machine . . . Joe DiMaggio is hitting .386 against Cleveland pitching this season, and four of the nine homers he has banged were against Bob Feller . . . Ellis Goodman, who once drop-kicked five geld goals to decide the D. C. sandlot championship game of 1921, now is the prosperous owner of the Arena Sports Shop. The Goodman-Wolf battery also took the Rialto and Kanawha teams to the city championships . . . the suspension of Bill McGowan, even if it is lifted, puts the umpire on the spot for any ball player who wants to make trouble for him unless the league gives him full backing.

UNTIL JOE LOUIS submits his retirement in writing, as is required by the New York Boxing Commission and the NBA, skeptics will continue to doubt his sincerity . . . Lou Boudreau blames his bad ankles on basketball, recalling that Bucky Harris and Bill Werber also declared the pounding their feet took on the hard basketball floors shortened their playing careers by five years . . . but Boudreau credits basketball with teaching him the fast break that has made him a superior infielder . . . Clark Griffith says the Nats would be a pennant factor with one more hard-hitting outfielder, and will make another attempt to bring Buddy Lewis out of retirement in 1949 . . . Dave Porterfield, the Yankees' farm hand who won nine in a row at Newark and pitched 36 consecutive shutout innings, apparently is modest. He says: "I was lucky and had great support by the team. In one of my shutouts, I gave up 10 hits. That's proof enough." . . . Luis Firpo, who knocked Jack Dempsey out of the ring but missed winning the heavyweight title, is grooming his Argentine countryman, Abel Cestac, for an invasion of the American heavyweight ranks . . . Korea is represented by an Olympic team this year for the first time, despite the fact that a Korean, Son Ki Jung, won the 1936 Olympic marathon. He ran as a member of the Japanese team in that year . . . the United States Army, in announcing Korea's participation in the Olympics, notes that "rice is the staff of life to every Korean, and kinchi, a sort of Korean pickle, is made from cabbages and turnips, and tastes better than it smells . . ."

Macks Whip Tigers, 8-6, Move Ahead By ½ Game

Philadelphia, July 24 (AP).—The Philadelphia Athletics took over first place in the tight American League pennant race today with an 8-6 victory over the Detroit Tigers as the Boston Red Sox dropped the Cleveland Indians into third place.

The Athletics' victory gave them a margin of a half game over the Red Sox. The Indians trailed the Sox by another half game.

A five-run splurge in the eighth inning, featuring Pinch Hitter Carl Scheib's single with the bases loaded carried the A's to their triumph.

Art Houtteman had the Athletics under control going into the eighth with a 6-3 margin. He was sent to the showers with two on and none out and one run in and Stubby Overmire took over.

Overmire walked Pete Suder to load the bases and then joined Houtteman in the showers. That lone walk tagged Overmire with the loss.

Hal Newhouser came in and walked Mike Guerra to force in the fifth run. Scheib, batting for winning Pitcher Bob Savage, singled, scoring the deciding two runs. Guerra tallied the other run as Hoot Evers booted Scheib's drive past third.

Detroit put the tying runs on base in the ninth but a double play on Bob Swift's grounder, the Athletics' 107th twin killing of the season, ended the game.

Triple Play, Too

Browns Get 20 Hits, Rout Nats, 13 to 2

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

The Browns made a triple play, three double plays, 20 base hits and a wreck out of the Nats yesterday.

Thwarted by that first-inning triple killing, the Nats remained in a state of subjugation the rest of the way and thoroughly lost the game, 13 to 2.

To the distress of 7059 ladies day patrons, the seventh placers showed enough muscle to score in every inning except the first and fifth and so registered their first victory at Griffith Stadium this year.

Tom McBride, who's been hitting at a .396 mark against left-handed pitching, was the gentleman who quashed an enterprising Nat start by hitting into the triple play.

Into Pellagrini's Hands

With the bases loaded on a single by Eddie Yost, a walk to Al Kozar and an infield hit by Gil Coan, McBride drilled a liner to the mound.

Thinking the ball had hit the ground, the runners were off at the crack of the bat. The ball, however, hit Southpaw Bill Kennedy just above his ankle and popped into the hands of Shortstop Eddie Pellagrini for the first out.

Pellagrini rifled the ball to Bob Dillinger to double up Yost at third. Dillinger then whipped the ball to Chuck Stevens who stepped on first to make Coan the third out.

Satisfied that they had the defensive pattern to stop the Nats, the Brownies went to work on Early Wynn, Tom Ferrick and Sid Hudson, bashing this trio with gusto.

Rookie Outfielder Dick Kukos, fresh from Toledo, led the onslaught with three singles and a double. Gerry Priddy, on the local payroll last year, continued his hard attack against his former playmates by accouning for five runs, driving in three and scoring a pair himself.

Wynn Chased

The Browns wormed up against Wynn, who suffered his eleventh reversal, with single runs in the second and third, but disposed of him in the fourth with a three-run salvo.

Ferrick unwisely entered hostilities at this point and stayed around to enliven the Spirit of St. Louis to the tune of three more runs and seven hits. Hudson, working the last three innings, kept the Missouri interest rampant with his five-run, seven-hit performance.

With the Browns holding only a slim 5-0 advantage, Manager Zack Taylor took no chances on Starter Kennedy and removed him in the fifth when the Nats used three of their 12 hits to score their first run. Ned Garver finished up for Kennedy and the Griffs wrenched their final run out of him in the eighth on two more hits.

Everybody in the Brownie line-up except Bob Dillinger and Roy Partee, who only played the last two innings, got at least one hit.

Hockey Lions Coach Transfers

Tulsa, Okla., July 24 (AP).—Appointment of Jack Riley, 29, coach and right winger of the Washington Lions in the American Hockey League last season, as coach of the Tulsa Oilers of the United States Hockey League was announced today by Club Owner Sam Avey.

He succeeds Clint Smith, who was made a free agent at his request. The Oilers became affiliated with the Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League midway of last season.

Here's a Batter The Nats Could Use

Leeds, England, July 24 (AP).—Neil Harvey paced Australia to a grand recovery in the fourth test match today.

Harvey, a left-hander, batted out 112 and Australia was only 39 runs behind England.

WILLIAMS IS BACK—Ted Williams, left, is back in the line-up of the Boston Red Sox with a vengeance after a layoff since July 9 when he injured his side. Ted drove in the winning run in the first game and scored the clincher in the second game as the Bosox won a double-header from Cleveland yesterday, 6-5 and 2-1. But even a great hitter like Ted has his moments of disappointment as illustrated by the above picture showing him apparently disagreeing with the umpire's decision on a called strike. Willians' keen eye is seldom fooled

Cleveland Tumbles to 3d in Losses By 6-5, 2-1

Boston, July 24 (AP).—Doing everything the hardest possible way, the rampaging Boston Red Sox caused an American League earthquake today by twice coming from behind to sweep a double-header from the Cleveland Indians, 6-5 and 2-1, before an enthralled 34,129 crowd.

As a result the Indians, who had been in first place since June 1, dropped down into third as the Philadelphia Athletics took over the lead—by the slim margin of two percentage points atop the Red Sox, who now have won their last 11 starts.

While dropping their first twin bill of the season, the Indians had ample reason to place most of the blame on slugger Ted Williams, despite the fact they limited him to three hits, including a pair of doubles, out of eight tries.

In the eighth inning of the opener, during which the Sockers staged a two-run rally, Williams singled in Dom DiMaggio with the "clincher."

Ted's Double Ties It

In the seventh session of the nightcap, Ted lashed a two-bagger off the left-field fence against Starter Sam Zoldak to drive in DiMaggio, who had walked, with the tying run.

That solid blow brought Bob Feller himself rushing out of the bull pen and he managed to make Junior Stephens fly to left for the second out.

But then Feller threw eight consecutive balls to pass Bobby Doerr and Sam Mele. The Cleveland fireballer was replaced by Russ Christopher when he threw two more wide balls to Bill Goodman with the bases loaded.

Christopher, making his second relief appearance of the day, was unable to find the plate and Williams was forced in with the winning run when Goodman was given two more wide ones.

Until the seventh, thanks to three double plays, Zoldak had faced only 18 batters while giving up two hits and a base on balls.

Bob Lemon Batted Out

The Red Sox got the first game under way in decisive fashion by greeting Bob Lemon, out for his fourteenth win, with a three-run opening inning. But the Indians stormed back against Jack Kramer for four runs in the second, two of them as a result of Lemon's one-on homer into the right-field stands.

Yanks Collapse In 10th, Giving Chisox Split

New York, July 24 (AP).—The New York Yankees lost a grand opportunity to gain on the American League leaders today when they could do no better than gain an even break with the cellar-dwelling Chicago White Sox, losing the second game, 8-4, in 10 innings after winning the opener, 6-2.

As a result, the Yanks found themselves still in fourth place, a game and a half behind the third place Indians and two and a half in back of the new American League leaders, Connie Mack's Philadelphia Athletics.

The Yankees came from behind, scoring two runs in the bottom of the ninth to tie the score at 4-4. The Sox, however, came roaring back to grab four runs off Joe Page, the third Yankee hurler, to clinch the game in the tenth.

Frank Shea, who was getting his "do-or-die" chance in the opener, earned another shot at a regular starting berth by holding the Sox to six hits in the opener. It was his first victory since May 31.

Charles-Bivins Bout Likely to Be Postponed

The Ezzard Charles-Jimmy Bivins fight, scheduled here August 2, in all probability will be postponed, District Boxing Commission Chairman Heinie Miller told The Washington Post early this morning.

Miller said he had talked with Dr. Walter Phillips, Cincinnati doctor who had examined Charles, and that Dr. Phillips recommended a postponement of at least a week.

Upon request of the local commission, Charles was examined by Dr. Walter Phillips of Cincinnati, where Charles is training for the fight. Phillips, according to Miller, said Charles is undergoing treatment for hemorrhoids.

Miller said last night, "No action will be taken until Monday, when I receive the reports of the Cincinnati doctors who examined Charles."

Mintz Has Different Story

Jake Mintz, Charles' manager, had a different story. From Columbus, Ohio, last night he told The Washington Post:

"I received a telegram from Miller advising us that the postponement has been granted and that the fight will be staged August 9. Charles is not hurt. He simply isn't in shape. He started training too late and needs another week before he's ready for the most important fight of his career."

Miller denied this, saying he had not even been in communication with Mintz.

Furthermore, Miller said, the August 9 date at Griffith Stadium has been reserved for Promoter Goldie Ahearn, although Ahearn has not requested license for a show from the Boxing Commission for that date.

Ahearn, however, last night said: "We are positively going to have a boxing show on that date. I don't know who it will be or what, but we'll have a show."

Chairman Miller added that Phillips, a doctor for the Cincinnati commission, also told him in a wire that Charles would leave Cincinnati Wednesday night for Washington to be examined here.

Stymie 4th; May Retire

Oceanport, N. J., July 24 (AP).—Stymie discovered again today that the last $100,000 is the hardest as Bayard Sharp's Tide Rips flashed to an easy victory in the $29,150 Monmouth Park Handicap.

The world's top money-winning horse, made a 7-to-10 favorite by a crowd of 27,379 who wagered $1,846,977, could do no better than fourth, as he missed out on the big first-place prize for the second straight Saturday.

Hirsch Jacobs, who trains Stymie for his wife, Mrs. Ethel D. Jacobs, said the 7-year-old son of Equestrain would be shipped immediately to Jack Skinner's farm at Middleburg, Va.

Jacobs said he would await an examination of the gallant turf veteran before deciding if Stymie would ever race again. This was the 125th start in Stymie's brilliant career, and he has won four times this year to boost his "firsts" to 35, with 32 seconds, and 26 thirds.

Tide Rips, a 4-year-old chestnut son of Battleship, took a slight lead as the field of seven swept past the judges the first time

Marlet Stable's Vertigo 2d ran second, five lengths back of the flying leader, and three panels in front of Bermill Farm's Bug Juice, which took the show money by 2½ lengths over Stymie.

Stymie, who had earned $909,835 up to this afternoon in his aim of a million dollars, had to be content with fourth money of $1500 as Tide Rips got away with the $19,850 winner's jackpot.

Bartender Wins Publinx; Bottle-Thrower Leads Open

READING, PA., July 24 (AP).—Temperamental Freddy Haas, jr., complained about spectators and threw a bottle at a tree on the fourteenth hole, but he led the field in the $15,000 Reading Open today with a 54 hole 16 under par 200.

Rod Munday, York, Pa., Country Club pro, fell from a first place tie to a third place deadlock with South African Bobby Locke at 204.

Haas, New Orleans, La., pro, added a four under par 68 to his opening round 65—record for the Berkshire Country Club course—and his 67 of yesterday. The Peoria, Ill., Open champion and runnerup in the New Orleans Open, scored five birdies. He bogeyed the 448-yard par four, fourteenth hole.

The 32-year-old pro had gal-

ATLANTA, July 24 (AP).—Mike Ferentz, the diminutive bartendeer from Long Beach, Calif., laid three perfect stymies which Ben Hughes of Portland, Oreg., could not jump to win the twenty-third National Public Links Golf Tournament, 2 and 1, today.

Hughes, a 31-year-old accountant, was a threat to win the championship during the entire 36-hole final round at North Fulton Park. He was longer and more accurate off tees and his putting was superior.

On approaches they were about even on the 6762-yard, par 71 course.

The final victory margin came on two of the stymies laid on the thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth holes.

Bare Facts Exposed

Even Cupid Would Be Barred Under Rules Calling for Adequate Clothing for Archers

Reno, Nev., July 24. (U.P.).—The West might be wild and rugged but there'll be no naked (or even half-naked) men and women Robin Hoods twanging arrows toward their targets in Reno.

That's the word today from the committee in charge of the sixty-fourth annual tournament of the National Archery Association, to be held here August 2 to 7.

Some 500 archers from 37 States and three foreign countries are due in Reno in about a week. Association President John Siegle of Berkeley, Calif., and his tournament committee are already on the scene.

After taking a look at Reno's 24-hour gambling and drinking—and sweltering in the heat—they remembered what happened in Cincinnati two years ago and made some rules.

Posted prominently in the front section of the tournament program is the note to archers, entitled "a word about appearance on the range."

"Even though the West has the reputation of being a rugged, pioneering, carefree country, its citizens do not roam the streets inadequately clothed.

"The tournament committee, feeling that it is acting in the best interests of archery and protecting the reputation of the NAA, earnestly requests that all archers on the range be adequately clothed."

And finally, underlined, "to put it clearly, men with bare torsos and women in scanty halters are not adequately clothed."

Now about that Cincinnati matter.

Siegle explained that Cincinnati was suffering from a heat wave in 1946, when the tournament was first revived following the war.

"It was very hot, indeed," Siegle recalled, "and our men wore shorts and the women wore—well, I'd rather not say."

"Quite frequently it was very embarrassing, especially so when they pulled back their bows to let go their arrows."

He had a reassuring word for Reno residents who were a little started at seeing the cover of the July issue—devoted to the Reno tournament—of the American Bowman-Review, the NAA magazine.

It portrayed a picture of a young Adonis-looking man clad only in a bow and arrow and . . . er . . . a fig leaf.

"There'll be none of that in Reno," Siegle assured. "No, sir, none whatever."

On the Line

—With Considine

London, July 24 (INS).—Britain's Labor government takes considerable pride in looking out for the little man.

But it is giving him a swift kick in the derrieres in sports.

The British counterpart of our American two-buck better and bleacherite is an industrious, hard-working, ill-paid bloke whose favorite sports are football and dog racing, on both of which he is ready to wager two bob or 40 cents.

Considine

But the Labor government seems to be rationing gusto among this group.

Most of the huge stands at the White City Stadium where Gus Lesnevich and Freddie Mills fight Monday night for the light heavyweight title will be empty. The reason is the government has restricted attendance to 40,000 and Promoter Jack Solomons has reacted traditionally by making most of the seats expensive.

Dog racing has been cut to two cards a week. On Wednesday and Saturday nights, but horse racing—whose expensiveness places it pretty much out of the range of the little guy—has daily cards and attracts plenty of customers who come in cars burning precious petrol while the blokes generally are bus or train users.

FOOTBALL—or soccer as we insist on calling it—now labors under a difficult arrangement which parallels a baseball schedule which would prohibit the Dodgers from playing at Ebbets Field if the Yanks were at Yankee Stadium.

In other words the Government here doesn't want many people from a concentrated area to interest themselves in sports because it wants the little guy to stay on his job and keep enough of his slender earnings to pay the heaviest taxes in the world.

The Government recently placed a 10 per cent tax on all pari-mutuel play and now is considering 10 per cent more on bookmakers which will cause preposterously low payoffs and result in winnings of pennies not shillings and pounds for two bob betters.

There is resentment here among the litle guys which is reflecting itself in local elections. Much of it springs from favors shown horse owners and horse track operators who are able, among other things, to get around the austerity phases of gas rationing by advertising auction sales and furniture marts adjacent to the track—thus making it okay to drive to the races on the pretext of buying some essential.

IT IS A MILD phenomenon to see the seriousness with which my good friends the British sports writers are regarding the Lesnevich-Mills fight.

It would not draw $25,000 if staged in New York with Buicks for door prizes. But it is big stuff here in a land which, because of its terrible war experiences, should recognize the difference between a battle and a maneuver.

Mills would have difficulty getting a license to fight in the United States. In a recent loss to one Lloyd Marshall, Freddie gave an alarming example of punch-happiness by turning his back on Marshall and shadow-boxing thin air.

In one clinch he stuck out his tongue at Marshall in the manner of a gnarled, over-grown brat.

After the fight, Marshall told sportswriters:

"He's a good boy, but I'm afraid he is going to get hurt if he stays in the ring."

LESNEVICH arrived here hog-fat a month ago, but had managed to get down to the required 175 pounds by existing on the British diet which remains as drably bland and as meager as during the war.

There is some speculation over whether he'll make the weight, but he'll do it, Joe Vella, his manager, tells us, even if he has to amputate.

They last fought in 1946 and Lesnevich flattened him for keeps in the tenth round. It should be quicker this time.

Mills' eligibility for the title bout seems based on the fact that he rolled over three round heels in the last year—Pol Goffaux of Belgium, Paco Bueno of Spain and Ken Shaw, a Scot.

Solomons is asking and getting 50 bucks for his better seats. The fight—to use the charitable noun—will gross nearly a quarter of a million dollars and Lesnevich, all but unsung in his homeland, is being guaranteed $100,000—the biggest purse in his long and semianonymous career.

DEAN CROMWELL, Olympic coach, believes he was on the right track in refusing United States runners permission to work out hard during the passage to England on the S. S. America, and no one can say he was wrong unless our crowd flops abysmally when the guns start popping. Cromwell explains:

"I am more than pleased with the condition of our team and I am ignoring the criticism received from the press and elsewhere.

"That forced rest will stand the boys and girls in very good stead. I am following the lesson learned 20 years ago when our boys left their best races on the hard decks of the liner to Amsterdam."

Cromwell also refused to let the team work Thursday, the day after arrival at Southampton, because, through a mixup and early docking, they averaged only three or four hours sleep.

Cromwell reports that Mel Patton, our chief hope in the sprints, is "light as a feather on his feet."

Patton himself just looks off into space and keeps saying: "I wish the games started today."

lery trouble. On the sixth fairway a spectator stepped on his ball and Haas, with permission of Johnny Palmer, Badin, N. C., picked up the pellet and dropped it over his shoulder. He scored a par three on the hole.

AFTER HITTING what he termed "the worst drive I ever hit" through a tree to the left of the seventh fairway, Haas complained about women standing in back of him. Despite this mental disturbance he again carded a par.

On the long tenth hole, Haas missed a 20-foot putt by less than an inch, which didn't serve to improve his disposition any. Again it turned out to be a par hole.

He reached the end of his patience on the fourteenth when his tee shot went astray. A soft drink bottle crashed against a tree as Haas showed his displeasure.

Earlier, Clayton Heafner, burly Southerner from Charlotte, N. C., fired a six-under-par 66 to eventually wind up second with 202.

Apparently fully recovered from a lacerated hand, Haefner turned the front nine in 30 and came back in par 36. He just missed a record equaling 65 on the eighteenth green—graveyard for many golfers in this tournament so far. Haefner failed on a 4-foot putt.

Bantam Ben Hogan, Hershey, Pa., appeared ready to regain his money-wining laurels from Lloyd Mangrum, Niles, Ill., pro. Hogan shot a 66 today for a total 205 while Mangrum languished 13 strokes off the pace at 213.

Also bracketed at 205 were Jimmy Demaret, Ojai, Calif.; Pete Cooper, Ponte Verde, Fla., and defending champion E. J. (Dutch) Harrison, Little Rock, Ark.

holes of the 180-hole golf marathon changed repeatedly and the match was not won by Ferentz until the final unsuccessful stymie jump attempt.

The new public links champion and the runner-up are tournament veterans. Ferentz played in seven matches on the 1946 winter professional circuit as an amateur. Hughes played to the semifinals of last year's public links at Minneapolis.

Ferentz, 32 years old and Southern California public links golf champion, took the lead on the first hole of the morning round and made the turn 2 up. On the back nine it was all Hughes. Hughes led 2 up at the end of the first 18.

This afternoon Ferentz made a fine comeback and had the match even at hole 27. On the final back nine, the lead swung continually from even to a 1-up advantage for the Californian until he threw the last two stymies.

The match was even on the twenty-seventh with a Ferentz par.

Ferentz took the lead again on the twenty-eighth when Hughes picked up and conceded the hole. One of Hughes' shots was out of bounds, he dubbed another and the third was a big hook.

The match went even again on the twenty-ninth as Ferentz drove too long and found a bad lie on the edge of a ditch. Ferentz matched the lead again on the 220-yard par three thirtieth, but fell on the thirty-first when his ball went into an inlet of a lake.

The thirty-second was halved with 3s.

U. S. 'Three-Deep' for Olympic Swim Relays

Yank Team Engineers Trick Play

By Charles A. Grumich

London, July 24 (AP).—As the result of a perfectly legal conspiracy pulled by American water sprint aces on the nonswimming high brass of the American Olympic Committee, the United States has an even dozen contenders ready to swim in the 4-man 800-meter relay races at the London Olympics.

This factor, plus the indications that other countries lack reserves to team up with individual swimming stars for the relay competition, raised the probability that in one aquatic event, at least, the United States will carry off a team championship.

Coach Bob Kiphuth, who happily defended the conspirators by citing international natatorial law and beat the budgetary department into a hasty retreat, is thus in about the same position as a football coach who is three deep in backfield talent.

It Started in Detroit

The story of the 12-man relay squad takes us back to Detroit, where, in the final American Olympic swimming trials, the top six American swimmers deliberately knocked themselves out in or after the preliminary heats.

Since they had made the team already in other events, they showed that a crawl really can be a crawl, and left six relay squad berths open to men who otherwise would have been crowded off the Olympic team.

These tactics did not smack well with the Olympic fathers in New York, who were trying to pull in the last contributions to meet the $512,000 estimated budget for the overall American Olympic expenses. Indignation was their first reaction to the Detroit conspiracy.

Their huff cooled off when the Olympic swimming hierarchy—primed for just such a reaction—told the high brass pointedly that: (1) the water teams had raised their own $50,000 budget and (2) there was nothing in the rules of the Federation Internationale De Natation Amateur (FINA) to prevent any qualified member of any national swimming team from competing in any aquatic event on the Olympic program.

Rules Circumvented

Sounds, the swimming people said (or words to that effect), we can use a distance swimmer in fancy diving if we want to. They also said they could put a diver into the 1500-meter swim, although this would be difficult for, as everyone knows, divers swim no farther than necessary to get out of the water.

The American regulations in this respect are a little more strict than those of the FINA.

Under U. S. Olympic qualifying rules a contender must actually take part in trials for each event in which he hopes to compete on the international program.

Four of the best American swimmers complied with this but slow. They are Wally Ris, the premier sprinter from the University of Iowa; former YYale Alan Ford; Northwestern's Bill Heusner, jr., and Philadelphia's Joe Verdeur, the breast-stroke ace, who is a first-class free-styler too.

McLane, Smith "Scratched"

There you have the four who probably will swim the crucial tests in the 800-meter relay in the Wembley Olympic pool.

In the second rank are Jimmy McLane of Akron, Ohio, and Andover Academy, and Ukelele Bill Smith of Ohio State University, who finished one-two in the trial heats at Detroit and then scratched themselves from the finals.

The actual qualifiers for the relay—the six on the team by courtesy of the six who quit before the Detroit finals—are Wally Wolf, Los Angeles; William H. Dudley III, New Orleans; Robert Gibe, Detroit; Edwin Gilbert, University of Texas; George Hoogerhyde, Michigan State College, and Eugene Rogers, New York A. C.

The United States will be trying a comeback in swimming. Americans haven't won a majority of aquatic races since the 1920s when Johnny Weismuller, who anchored the winning relay teams in 1924 and 1928 and outdistanced the field generally.

Local Area Shooters Win

Salisbury, Md., July 24 (AP).—Marksmen from Salisbury, Chevy Chase and Bethesda banged their way into first place honors today in the opening events of the annual Maryland Skeet Shoot.

On Sunday more than 150 contestants are expected to shoot it out in the all-bore 12-gauge championships for men and women. The State Junior all-bore event also will be held tomorrow, final day of the shoot.

In today's competition, Ed. Calhoun, 1946 State skeet champion of Salisbury, scored 47 out of a possible 50 to take the subsmall 410 contest. Runner-up was 18-year-old Jimmy Dennis, also of Salisbury, with 46 out of 50.

J. C. Dalton of Chevy Chase winged 49 out of 50 targets in the small bore 28-gauge shoot for honors in that class. There was a tie for second place with Calhoun and Vic Frank of Bethesda, each scoring 47.

The 20-gauge shoot was won by J. V. Wyvell of Bethesda, who brought down 98 out of 100 targets. Dalton was a close runner-up with 97.

More than 100 contestants took part in today's events.

37,886 Watch Giants, Cubs Divide Pair

Chicago, July 24 (AP).—The New York Giants and Chicago Cubs divided a finely pitched double header today, the Cubs winning the opener, 3-1, and the Giants coming back to take the nightcap, 3-0.

A crowd of 37,886 saw Doyle Lade, recently recalled from Los Angeles of the Pacific Coast League, rack up his first victory of the season, holding the Giants to eight hits in the opener. Clint Hartung, handicapped by his own wildness and three Giants errors, was the loser, although he permitted only seven hits.

Dave Koslo outdueled Rookie Bob Rush in the nightcap. The little lefthander allowed only five hits, two of them in the ninth inning when the Cubs gave him his only scare. Losing pitcher Rush, Cliff Chambers and Bob Chapman were tagged for only six safeties, but three of them came in the fourth, furnishing the Giants with all their runs.

The Cubs scored their first run in the first inning of the opener without the aid of a base hit. Two walks, sacrifice and an infield out by Andy Pafko, gave them a run. Rookie Clarence Maddern rapped his fourth home run of the campaign in the fifth. All have been collected off Giant pitching.

President's Cup Looms Best Ever

The 1948 President's Cup Regatta promises to be the biggest and best in the event's long history here. James A. Councilor, jr., general chairman, announced yesterday that the regatta will have its grand opening on Labor Day, September 6, and close four weeks later, Sunday, September 26.

Regatta officials decided to open the annual affair a week earlier than usual to ntice a banner field of oarsmen participating in the Old Dominion Boat Club meet at Alexandria on September 5. The competition will draw top crewmen from Canada, British Columbia and the Pacific Coast.

Second week feature will be a big swimming meet with canoe races on September 12. On September 18-19 the sailing races will hold attention along the Potomac. Grand finale, of course, will be the two-day powerboat events off Hains Point on September 25 and 26.

Lanham Victor

Buddy Baumgardner pitched a four-hitter as Lanham defeated Colmar Manor, 5-3, yesterday in a Prince Georges Boys Club League game.

Holt Wins Soldier Golf

Master Sergt. John W. Holt of Fort McNair yesterday won the Military District of Washington golf championship at Rock Creek Park, defeating Maj. Mannie L. Raley of Arlington Hall, 1 up.

Holt trailed Raley by five strikes going into the final 18-hole round. His 2-under-par 65 eased him in ahead of Raley, who slipped to a 72 on the final round.

Holt's victory won for Fort McNair the team championship of the MDW and the right to represent Washington in the Army Nationals at Fort Lewis, Wash., in August.

Members of the winning Fort McNair team are Holt, First Lieut. Emmanuel Barattino, First Lieut. James Dalman and Pfc. Norman Krieger.

Tournament medalist was Master Sergt. W. I. Houghton of Army Medical Center, who scored a low gross 72, 68—140.

Ev Eynon Hurls Perfect Game, Strikes Out 11

Everett Eynon pitched a perfect five-inning game as Federal Storage whipped Industrial Home School, 15-0, yesterday in a Western Division senior class Boys Club of Washington League game.

Eynon struck out 11 of the 15 men he faced and allowed no one to reach first base. Jimmy Kline's two-run triple paced the winners' attack. Storage also won, 5-1, from the Southwest Harbor Lions.

Other league scorees: Southwest Harbor Lions, 6; Sealtest Milk, 1. May Hardware, 11; Arlington, 6. Georgetown, 4; Alexandria, 3.

U. S. May Win 3 Rowing Titles

Henley, England, July 24 (AP).—The United States is aiming at three victories in seven Olympic rowing events, thanks to what Assistant Coach Allen (Skip) Walz of Yale terms "the strongest unit we have ever brought to the games."

These are: eight-oared shell, in which the University of California crew will carry the American shield; the single sculls, with John B. Kelly, jr., of Philadelphia, the diamond sculls champion; and the four-oared shell with coxswain, with the American team composed of the stern four out of the University of Washington's great junior varsity eight.

19 Points for 'Whites' . . .

Bob Kurland Still Shines In Olympic Cage Exhibition

Kilkadly, Scotland, July 24 (AP).—A "White" team from the U. S. Olympic basketball squad defeated a "Blue" quintet, 45-44, in an exhibition game tonight before 3000 spectators.

Seven-foot Bob Kurland again was the individual star. The former Oklahoma A. and M. College ace tallied 19 points to lead the "Whites" to victory.

Pacing the "Blues" with 10 points each were Alex Groza and Ralph Beard, both from the University of Kentucky.

Iranians 'Loined'

London, July 24 (AP).—An American reporter, who learned Arabic in the Middle East during the war, addressed an Iranian Olympic athlete today in halting Arabic.

The Iranian's reply: "Speak the lingo. I can talk plenty dam English."

His natural inquiry of where they learned this tongue, with accents ranging from Manhattan's East Side to the cornfields of Illinois, brought the answer: "Loined it from the Yank sojers."

Flame Flickers On

St. Maurice, Switzerland, July 24 (AP).—The Olympic flame reached this ancient Roman town in the Rhone Valley today.

It is being carried by relay runners from Mount Olympus in Greece to the London games, which start Thursday. St. Maurice is approximately the half-way point in the 1333-mile journey.

Parkside Wins 1st Half Crown

Bill Winstead's two-hitter gave Parkside Grill a 2-1 victory over the 1830 club and the first half championship of the District Recreation League No. 8 yesterday at West Potomac Park.

The winners' runs scored on a walk, Lou Negri's double and a single by Tom Cavanaugh.

Odell Joins Coaching Staff at Temple U.

Philadelphia, July 24 (AP).—Temple University announced today the appointment of Bob Odell as a member of its football coaching staff.

An All-America halfback for the University of Pennsylvania in 1943, Bob is a brother of Howie Odell, current head coach at the University of Washington.

Valbo Takes Jumper Honors

Brooklyn to Pitch 'No-Hit' Loes Against D. C. Stars

Sisler Comes Here

Nats' Hudson Luckless on Diamond, Oil

SID HUDSON, who's been having little luck pitching winning baseball for the Nats this year, had an even worse time of it as an investor. Last fall he was offered a piece of land near Lubbock, Tex., at $3 per acre, but he wasn't interested . . . Recently he learned that the purchasers struck oil on the land, which is now selling for $700 per acre . . . If League President Will Harridge doesn't make a decision in the Nat-McGowan case this weekend, he'll probably wait until next week when the Nats are in Chicago and he can talk with the principals involved.

REMEMBER Owen Carroll, the Holy Cross pitching sensation who played with the Tigers years ago? He'll be in Washington Tuesday as comanager of the Brooklyn-Against-the-World Team. He and George Sisler pilot the Flatbush entry . . . The Washington Caps, who at first were reluctant to participate in clinics, have now gone all-out for the idea. They plan a huge (free) clinic at Uline Arena in October, winding up the session by scrimmaging the Baltimore Bullets . . . The Nats have set a record of some sort for getting catchers knocked out this year. Jake Early has been sidelined with injuries three times and Al Evans is now sitting out his second enforced idleness.

SAL DEGIORGI, who wowed 'em in Brooklyn catching with the Washington All-Stars, will enter Seton Hall in the fall . . . That new Maryland football stadium will also include a field house which will house an indoor football field, large enough for Coach Split-T Tatum to drill his Terps when the weather is bad . . . Of the Nats' 38 victories, 20 have been won from first-division clubs. Against the Red Sox the Nats hold a 5-4 edge . . . Several Cleveland players feel that if the Indians don't win the pennant President Bill Veeck and Lou Boudreau must be blamed in a large measure for the failure . . . The players think that Veeck and Boudreau handled Bob Feller's withdrawal from the All-Star game poorly; that they, not Feller, should have announced that Feller would not pitch, and that the booing Feller receives now is hurting the one-time ace more than he wants to admit.

Tickets on Sale

Tickets for the Brooklyn-Washington All-Star amateur classic at Griffith Stadium Tuesday night will be on sale in the lobby of The Washington Post from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. Monday and Tuesday. They're also being sold at the ball park and may be purchased the night of the game. Admission, including tax, is $1.20.

He's Hurled 4 Already This Year

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Brooklyn's youthful All-Stars are more than a little anxious to get even with our Washington All-Stars—they're going to throw Billy (No-Hit) Loes at them.

That 12-2 trouncing at Ebbets Field dished out recently by the pick of the local junior baseball crop still rankles the proteges of the Brooklyn Bums.

They'll be out for revenge at 8:30 o'clock Tuesday night at Griffith Stadium.

This boy Loes was named the outstanding high school player in the Metropolitan New York area after he pitched Long Island City's Bryant High to the championship.

Probable line-ups:

Washington	Brooklyn
Bill Jones, 3b.	Dick Hanc, rf.
Jimmy Pantos, cf.	Bill Behrens, ss.
Norman Wacker, lf.	Larry DiPippo, 1b.
Ed Claxton, rf.	Ralph Draggato, lf.
Bobby Johnson, ss.	Don Zagardo, 2b.
Dave Zatz, 1b.	Pete Gentile, cf.
Bob Curtis, 2b.	Dan McMahon, 3b.
Sal DeGiorgi, c.	John Dewhirst, c.
Bill Witzel, p.	Billy Loes, p.

Other squad members: Washington—Pitchers, Don Kokes, Ben Duvall, Ed Kline; Len Bauroth, if; Ralph Fraser, of; Vince Pucliese, of; John Hogan, c. Brooklyn—Pitchers, Al De Grigorio, Frank Ponda, Harry Owens; Ed Cahill, of; Dick Hofleit, if; Joe Pignatano, c; Eddie Murphy, c.

No-hitters are old hat to him—he's hurled four this year and one last season.

Loes will rejoin the Brooklyn team, sponsored by the Brooklyn Eagle and the Brooklyn Dodgers, after returning from this last Western swing with the New York Giants.

The youthful right-hander won a newspaper contest and had his choice of going West with any of the three New York teams—don't ask us why he chose the Giants. If it was to get away from Leo Durocher, it didn't work.

Loes, still playing it cute, already has been offered $6000 to sign with the Phillies.

Funny thing when he was taking part in the elimination test for the Brooklyn All-Star squad, he pitched for Long Island against Brooklyn and struck out five in a two-inning trick but he was charged with the loss.

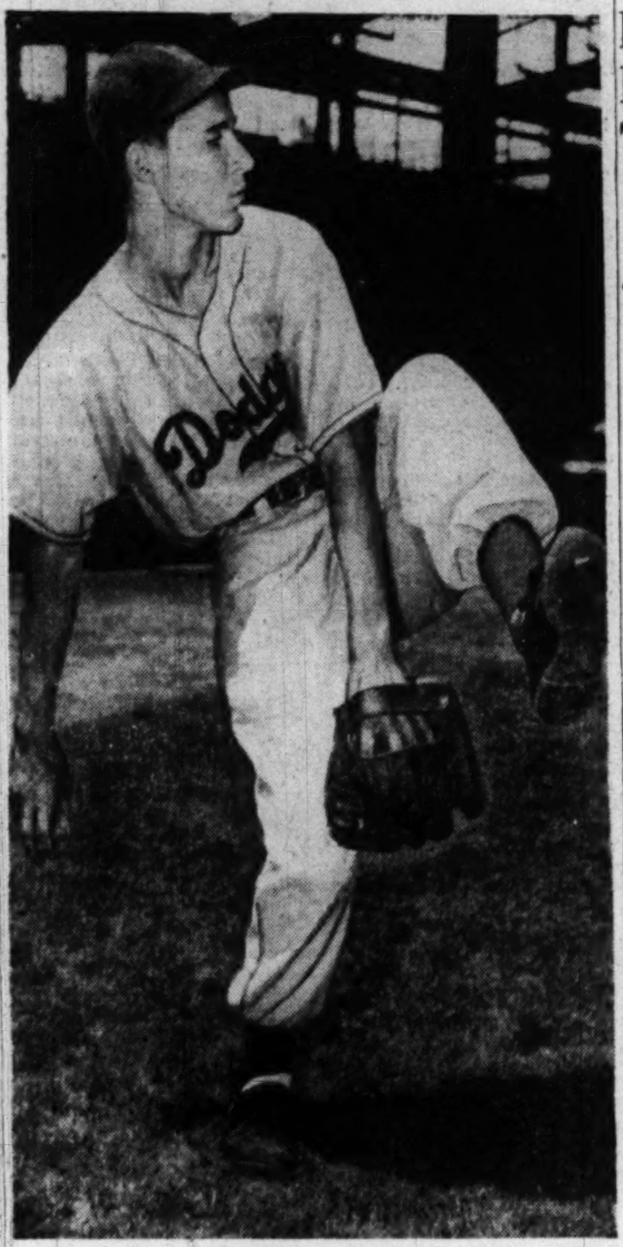
Manager Jim Murro, of the Washington All-Stars, has heard all about Loes but says he isn't worrying.

After watching his charges tune up on the West Ellipse yesterday, Munro said, "I think we have some fair hitters. Don't forget we got 15 hits at Ebbets Field."

Munro thinks if Loes is 18 (he is) his boys won't find him too tough. At that, genial Jim has a point. After all, Catcher Sal De Giorgi bounced one off the left-field wall at Ebbets Field and has been fighting off Dodger scouts since. Then First-Sacker Dave Zatz combed four successive singles. Even Pitcher Ed Kline knocked in three runs.

Starting pitcher for the locals Tuesday night will be Billy Witzel, star twirler on Munro's Marx nine and a student at Maryland.

The game here is just one in Brooklyn's international road trip. After it, the Brooklynites will journey to Halifax, Toronto, Nova Scotia, Quebec and Providence, R. I.



BROOKLYN'S BEST—Bill Loes, ace pitcher of the Brooklyn Junior All-Stars, has shown so much promise that the New York Giants took him on their last road trip as an observer. Loes has a number of no-hit games to his credit this season and probably will oppose Washington's All-Stars in an intercity clash at Griffith Stadium Tuesday night

Newsom Tries Arm and Voice At Boys' Game Tuesday Night

Ol' Bobo Newsom, who never is without a pitching job for long, hopes to be out on the mound at Griffith Stadium Tuesday night.

Newsom graciously agreed yesterday to pitch batting practice for the youthful members of the Brooklyn All-Stars and Washington All-Stars before game time, 8:30 p. m.

"Bo, I'd be happy to let those kids see some of old Bo's stuff," said Bo. "Only trouble is I gotta little deal brewin' and may have to go out of town. But you can say if old Bo's here Tuesday he'll be out there pitching for the kids."

It would be a great thing for the young ball players to bat against Newsom. They'd have a chance to perform in a big-league setting against a big-league pitcher.

There's nobody any more big league than old Bobo, the ex-Nat, ex-Tiger, ex-Brown, ex-Mack, ex-Red Sox, ex-Yankee, ex-Dodger, ex-Cub and ex-Giant.

And it would be a lot of fun to watch Newsom perform against the kids. Bobo, great Griffith Stadium favorite, always can be counted on to provide a real show.

If he's able to get out Tuesday night, Newsom will double as an announcer. He will team with Walter Haight, Washington Post sportswriter, on the public address system.

Since he's been back in town, Newsom's announced a few innings for Arch McDonald a la Dizzy Dean.—JACK WALSH.

Prince Georges Swim Draws 100

More than 100 will compete in tonight's AAU-sanctioned invitational swim meet at Prince Georges Golf and Country Club.

Represented will be Lakewood, Meadowbrook and Knights of Columbus swim clubs from Baltimore; Frederick, Md.; Takoma Park, Ambassador and Congressional from this area.

Diving will begin the program at 7:30 o'clock with 12 men and 8 women entered. Among them are Mr. and Mrs. John Russell of Baltimore, South Atlantic AAU champions. Representing Ambassador will be Soupey Bridges, Bill Carbert and Barbara McCutcheon.

Phillies Halt Reds' Rally To Win, 7-5

Cincinnati, July 24 (AP).—The Philadelphia Phillies scored seven runs in the first four innings and made them stand up today as they clipped the Cincinnati Reds, 7-5, before a crowd of 5100.

Young Curt Simmons allowed the Reds only two hits over the first seven innings but weakened in the eighth and was driven from the mound in a five-run eighth inning. Ken Heintzelman and Ed Heusser finished for the Phillies and saved the victory for Simmons, his fifth as against 10 defeats.

Philadelphia greeted starter Johnny Vander Meer with three runs on four hits in the opening round and then sent him to the showers with two more counters in the second. Single markers in the third and fourth rounded out the Phillies' scoring.

New York, July 24 (AP).—The New York football Yankees of the All-America Conference, who open their training Wednesday at Cheshire, Conn., announced receipt of Halfback Buddy Young's contract today.

Cardinal Owner Denies Dyer Is On Way Out as Manager

ST. LOUIS, JULY 24 (AP).—Manager Eddie Dyer of the St. Louis Cardinals will not go the way of Ben Chapman and Mel Ott—at least not now.

"It's true that I'm disappointed we're not in front, but I'm not getting panicky," Bob Hannegan, president of the Redbirds, declared today.

"I plan no change today. I am perfectly satisfied with the job Eddie has been doing."

In discussing Dyer's status and that of the club which recently has dropped away from the top of the National League race, Hannegan continued

"I repeat my statement of last December when I changed from politics to baseball. I'm new in this business, but I feel I'm learning the game pretty fast from all angles.

"I feel that I know enough about baseball to realize that a manager doesn't do all the pitching, batting, fielding and running for his ball club. We've lost a lot of games this season in which a base hit in the pinch would have won for us."

Asked about Dyer's chances to finish the season in charge of St. Louis, Hannegan repeated:

"I plan no changes, whatsoever. I won't talk about the future."

The rumors that Dyer was on the way out began a week ago Friday when the New York Giants, Brooklyn Dodgers and Philadelphia Phillies changed managers. Some reports were that Terry Moore would finish the season as Redbird pilot.

About this Hannegan said:

"Moore has been a great ball player . . . but to name Terry manager of the Cardinals? Not right now! We must remember that Moore has been only a player all these years."

Brewers, All-Stars Net $1100

Vic Gauzza, the man who keeps the City League rolling, announces that the recent game between Heurich Brewers and the All-Stars for the benefit of Mrs. Ralph Fraser, netted $1100.

Southeast Merchants, newest team member of the City Unlimited League, has not yet appeared in a league game but is already charged with two losses.

The Merchants were admitted to the league last week after Ahepa automatically forfeited its franchise by failing for the second time this year to show up for a game. The Merchants thus are charged with both defeats in order that the schedule be kept straight.

Northeast Body Works continues its domination of the City League. The first half champions are now tied for first place with the Merchandising Plumbers. Each has a 2-0 record.

Three teams are in contending positions for the second half championship of The Washington Post-Industrial League. Heurich and Cameo now are tied for first place, each with a 4-3 record. Thrifty is a half game back with 4-4.

Lesnevich 1 to 3 Choice Over Mills

London, July 24 (AP).—Gus Lesnevich is a firm 1-to-3 favorite to beat Freddie Mills in their world light-heavyweight title bout Monday night at White City Stadium, and many expect Gus to score a knockout.

The prize at stake, provided Lesnevich wins decisively, is a possible shot at the heavyweight championship, probably against Joe Louis in September. The fight crowd gathered in London fully expects Joe to come out of "retirement" if Lesnevich is the bait.

Gus, who has held the 175-pound title since before the war, stopped Mills in the tenth round of their bout here last year. As Gus feels he is hitting harder now he fully expects to flatten Freddie.

Bell Choice Over Hursey Tomorrow

With a new trainer and new ambitions, Smuggy Hursey faces an old foe Monday at Griffith Stadium, Tommy Bell.

Bell, operating under the same management as last September when he decisively thrashed Hursey, is a slight favorite to do it again tomorrow in their scheduled 10-rounder, headline match of Promoter Goldie Ahearn's Liberty Club fight offering.

Since their first meeting, Hursey has won only one fight and Bell's record is equally as unimpressive. Bell, however, has been stepping in fast company, one of his setbacks being a split decision loss to Kid Gavilan, the Cuban sensation.

Hursey's one-fight winning streak was scored at the expense of Cecil Hudson, two-time conqueror of Bell, at the ball park last month.

The only blot on Bell's losing record since the Hursey fight is a knockout victory for him over Larry Buxton. He's been victimized by Gavilan, Anton Raadik and boxed a draw with Buster Tyler.

Larry Amadee, one of Joe Louis' battery of handlers, recently associated himself with Hursey and thinks the local fighter has the stuff to make a real battler. Possessed of a strong body and with the courage of a lion, Hursey has never been taught the fundamentals of fighting.

Amadee has worked hard with his new charge for the past two weeks and thinks he's got something in Hursey. Hursey attracted some powerful gates here last summer and, if he can upset Bell tomorrow, the cash register may be ringing sweet tunes for him again before the summer season closes.

Bell, only a shadow of the fighter he was when he lost a 15-rounder to Ray Robinson for the welterweight title, is still a rough customer with his two fists.

Tommy says he's still good enough to lick the daylights out of the Hurseys, new trainers or not. Hursey has trimmed down to around 156, a new low for him, but he'll still have about a six-pound pull over Bell, a fact which makes the Smuggy rooters believe their boy has a good chance to score a victory.

Records Enters Lanham Races

"Reckless Rex" Records, nationally known driver from Stamford, Conn., will appear in the seven-event midget automobile competition at the West Lanham Speedway Friday night.

Records will be out to succeed where two other celebrated pilots have failed at Lanham recently. Duke Nalon, celebrated Indianapolis Speedway ace, was beaten out by Ed "Dutch" Schaefer in the feature race at Lanham two weeks ago while Lloyd Christopher bowed to George Fonder last Friday.

Parker, Talbert Reach Net Final

Pelham Manor, N. Y., July 24 (AP).—Frankie Parker of Los Angeles and Billy Talbert of New York reached the final round of the men's Eastern clay court championships today.

Top-seeded Parker turned back Eddie Moylan of San Francisco, 6—2, 6—2, 6—4.

Talbert, seeded second, downed Jack Thero of New Orleans, 6—3, 6—1, 2—6, 6—4, in the semi-final matches.

Latest Snider Clue False, Coast Guard Says

Miami, Fla., July 24 (AP).—Another clue to the disappearance of Jockey Al Snider was declared false today. The Coast Guard studied five notes in a bottle and signed "Al S" and said they probably were the work of a prankster. The message asked for help, adding "one dead, 71 m. West Pine Key. Report."

Mount Marcy Beats Better Self in Saranac

Ace Admiral Far Back in 3d Position

New York, July 24 (AP).—Even in the absence of champion Citation and runner-up My Request, a heavily backed Better Self had to play second fiddle to Mount Marcy today in the Saranac Handicap at Jamaica.

Generally rated as third best of the 3-year-olds, the King Ranch colt bowed by three quarters of a length to Mount Marcy, a $5.40 to $2 second choice from the C. V. Whitney barn.

Mrs. Elizabeth Graham's Ace Admiral, an entry with Jet Black, was beaten by five lengths for the place while heading Big Dial for third position.

A crowd of 32,392 saw Mount Marcy flash the mile and one-sixteenth in 1:44 4/5 over a fast track. The victor's share of the purse was $16,000. The race grossed $23,250.

Hard riding Ted Atkinson was spilled early in the running of the previous dash and, while apparently more chagrined than injured, was advised by the track physician to pass up his engagement to ride the Greentre Stable's Up Beat in the Saranac.

Jimmy Layton substituted for Atkinson, who lost little by missing the mount. Up Beat, after setting the early pace, faded to last among the seven 3-year-olds.

Drumbeat Wins $50,000 Race

Inglewood, Calif., July 24 (AP).—Drumbeat scored a surprise victory over On Trust and Shannon II in one-two-three fashion today in the $50,000 Sunset Handicap at a mile and five-eighth before 48,000 fans.

Drumbeat, owned by Mrs. Robert S. Howard, the former Andrea Leeds of the screen, and Mrs. Howard Sherman, won handily as the two big horses, On Trust and Shannon II, dueled for the last big purse of the Hollywood meeting.

Drumbeat, ridden by Jockey Theare Williams, ran the distance in 2 minutes 41 seconds.

Drumbeat paid $15.40, $4.90 and $4.80. On Trust returned $2.50 and $2.60, and Shannon II was $2.60 to show.

Stud Poker Upsets Favored Fervent

Chicago, July 24 (AP).—Stud Poker, a long shot, upset the Calumet Farm's Fervent, a 6-5 favorite, in the $56,100 Arlington Handicap today. Star Reward finished second, Fervent third and Pellicle fourth in a field of nine.

Old Vitacle's Chance Came Late, but She Made Good

9-Year-Old Mare Starred in Paddock

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

MOST RACE HORSES begin track careers at the age of 2. Occasionally a thoroughbred makes his first start at an advanced age. Not infrequently the horse wins.

Perhaps the best known winning first-time starter of this type was Chase Me, owned and trained by the late Mrs. Sarah Bosley.

Chase Me, despite superb breeding, didn't get around to racing in his younger years but, instead, became a pet of the Bosley children and carried them winging over the rail fences of Maryland's hunt country.

Most race fans are familiar with Chase Me's track story. How he won by 10 lengths in his debut at Havre de Grace; ran up a long string of victories that carried him upward to top handicaps and finally broke a leg in a New York race and was destroyed.

This race, incidentally, was the one on which the stage play and movie "Three Men On a Horse" was based—Equipoise winning, being disqualified, etc.

It is doubtful if the mare, Vitacle, will reach the turf heights achieved by Chase Me. However, her story is interesting.

AT 9 YEARS OF AGE, Vitacle had reached the grandma stage according to a horse's span of life. She had never been in a race.

One day, as the recent Charles Town meeting waned, old Vitacle found her way to the starting gate. When the break came, she hopped right out in front and stayed there—and to the tune of a $39.80 mutuel!

Several days later I learned her story.

In her youth, Vitacle was purchased by a Western man and taken to a section of the country where there was no racing. A few years back, a Kentucky breeder purchased her and brought her to his State as a brood mare.

While in Kentucky in search of breeding stock, Mrs. A. J. Boyle, wife of the president and general manager of the Charles Town Jockey Club, was impressed with the appearance of the mare and made a successful offer.

So Vitacle joined the mares and foals who make their home in Mrs. Boyle's trim barn just beyond the backstretch of the popular West Virginia track.

During the racing days, Vitacle, with the others, roamed the paddocks adjoining the track. Perhaps she yearned to run with those thundering thoroughbreds. However, she was in another branch of the business.

A year ago she dropped a foal and proved a good mother.

LAST SPRING, Mrs. Boyle believed she made a discovery. The mare Vitacle could run and, not only that, but appeared to want to run.

Following Vitacle's victory, Mrs. Boyle said, "I noticed each time the mares were turned out in the big paddock, Vitacle always outran the others. Not only that, but she fought to get to the front as the pack went around the outside. Perhaps I wouldn't have been so impressed, but among the mares are several who were winners of big-money races in their day.

"Five or six weeks ago I decided that if Vitacle wanted to race, I'd try to give her a chance. I don't race my horses at Charles Town, so I phoned an owner-trainer and asked him if he wanted to buy a horse that had speed. After noting the mare's age and greenness to competition, he declined.

"I called Ricco Rinaldi, local horseman, and explained about Vitacle, telling him he could lease the mare and keep the winnings, if any. Ricco agreed."

I couldn't help interrupting with, "At 18-1, Vitacle wasn't a bad bet."

"That's a funny thing," Mrs. Boyle continued, smiling. "I didn't know the mare was in the race. I had a lot of company that day and I understand Ricco came to tell me the mare was running, saw the crowd and went away."

Vitacle's future. Why racing, of course.

D. C. Doubles To Johnsen And Bogley

Gil Bogley and Dr. Dave Johnsen swept past two veteran masters, Barney Welsh and Hugh Lynch, 6—3, 6—2, 6—4, to win the District of Columbia men's doubles championship yesterday at the Kenwood Country Club.

Willie Herbert and Sosie Girgosin won the women's doubles title, defeating Betty Smith and Helen Tease, 6—2, 6—4.

Miss Welsh then teamed with Barney Welsh to win the mixed doubles title, 7—9, 6—4, 6—4, from Johnsen and Charlotte Decker.

Jack Vail Wins Both Heats In Hampton Boat at Cambridge

Cambridge, Md., July 24 (AP).—Jack Vail of the Norfolk, Va., Yacht and Country Club strengthened his position as leading Hampton skipper on Chesapeake Bay today at the annual Cambridge Yacht Club Regatta.

The Virginian took both heats of the Hampton series to virtually assure himself of the championship even though the third heat still is to be run tomorrow.

Vail beat 24 other skippers who made up the largest group at the regatta which was sailed with a brisk wind on the choppy Choptank River. The other six races drew a total of only 15 boats.

The regatta started off on the wrong tack in the morning when the contestants and committee got their signals crossed. As a result of a misunderstanding over the proper course, the committee was swamped with protests and it was decided to disregard the first heat in all but two classes and run them over in the afternoon.

Vail won his second heat by the slimmest of margins from Clay Gatewood's Lucille II of the Willoughby Yacht Club, also in Norfolk, which finished third in the first heat.

Besides Vail, four other skippers scored double victories: Ben Colonna, another Norfolk Yacht and Country Club member, won with Miss Carol in the Moths; Mason Shehan of Tred Avon Yacht Club with Duchess among the Stars, and Henry Savard, of Georgetown, Md., with Carefree in the Lightning class.

Aussies in Form, Defeat Cubans

Havana, July 24 (AP).—Australia's Davis Cup tennis team swept the first two singles matches against Cuba today in the American zone semifinal.

Adrian Quist, the visitors' No. 1 player, easily defeated Joffre Eechevery in straight sets, 6—1, 6—2, 6—0. His teammate, Billy Sidwell, playing in his first Davis Cup match, beat Cuba's top star, Jose Aguero, 6—1, 6—1, 6—4.

Despite the tropical heat the Australians showed something of the great style which made their nation one of the world's tennis centers. They appeared certain to win the rest of five series here and a good bet to advance to the final challenge round against the United States.

Mrs. Ann Gray In Net Finals

Harrisburg, July 24 (AP).—Bernard Bartzen of San Angelo, Tex., and James Evert of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., moved into the final round of the annual Fort Hunter invitation tennis tournament today.

In the women's division, Mrs. Ann Gray, defending champion of Washington, D. C., advanced to the finals by virtue of a 6—2, 6—1 victory over Mrs. Frances Barnard of nearby New Cumberland.

Bartzen, who won the title in 1946, turned aside Thomas Chambers, Hollywood, Calif., 6—3, 6—2, while Evert eliminated Phil Neff, Washington, D. C., in the other semifinal by the same score, 6—3, 6—2.

The finalists in the singles teamed up to move into the finals of the men's doubles, where they oppose Chambers and Tom Mulloy of Panama City, Fla., in tomorrow's championship match.

The Bartzen-Evert team won from Torrny Haanes of Oslo, Norway, and V. Minster Kunkle of Harrisburg, 6—0, 6—1. The Chambers-Mulloy combination took a semifinal match from Ed Kilgus of Philadelphia and Malcolm Fox of Baltimore, 6—3, 7—5.

Navy, Trojans Arrange Series

Annapolis, Md., July 24 (AP).—Rear Admiral James L. Holloway, jr., confirmed today that Navy's football team will play Southern California, "most likely in Baltimore Municipal Stadium in 1950." The game will be a return engagement for a clash between the two elevens in Los Angeles Coliseum, September 24, 1949.

Capt. Tom Hamilton, Academy athletic director, said the series with the Trojans is "a continuation of the Navy policy to nationalize its schedule." The Middie eleven opens its season against California in Baltimore this fall. Navy met the Golden Bears at Berkeley in its 1947 curtain raiser.

Brownies Bring Up Toledo Pitcher

St. Louis, July 24.—The St. Louis Browns announced today that Pitcher Ralph Schwamb had been brought up from their Toledo farm club of the American Association.

Schwamp has lost nine games with Toledo while winning only one, but his defeats include several tough luck decisions. He will join the Browns in Washington.

Capt. Robin Hippenstiel of headquarters, USAF, yesterday won the Air Force National Singles Championship, defeating Capt. Arthur Dreyer of Headquarters, USAF, 6—2, 6—4, 6—1, at the Army-Navy Country Club.

Hippenstiel also won the dougles championship with Col. A. J. Evans, also of Headquarters, USAF. They beat Capt. William A. Dietrich and Lieut. Robert Wilson, Central Area, 6—2, 6—2, 6—0.

Hippenstiel's twin victory won for the Eastern area the team championship of the tournament. Col. Nicholas E. Powell captained the winners. Runners-up in the order named were Southern Area under Maj. Lawrence Myers, Western Area under Col. James Parsons, Central Area under Dietrich and Far East under Maj. Thomas Bonner.

Ten tournament participants were named to the Air Force Leech Cup team under nonplaying Capt. Col. Millard Lewis, Headquarters, USAF.

They will compete against the Army and Navy for the cup, symbol of service supremacy on the courts, Friday and Saturday at the Army-Navy Country Club.

Leech Cup team members are Maj. Thomas Bonner, Far East; Capt. William A. Dietrich, Central Area; Capt. Arthur Dreyer, Col. A. J. Evans and Capt. Robin Hippenstiel, Headquarters, USAF; Capt. William Keller, Western Area; Lieut. William Schiver, Maxwell AFB; Capt. Elson E. Staugaard, Far East; Col. Nicholas E. Powell, Headquarters, USAF.

Redskins Off For Training On Thursday

The Washington Redskins' ninth trip to the West Coast for preseason conditioning takes place this week, starting Thursday as the nucleus of a squad of 46 players entrains for Occidental College on the outskirts of Los Angeles.

Head Coach Turk Edwards, with three other coaches, will leave Union Station in the company of 10 1948 candidates and pick up players along the way. Two more players, along with Coach Tiger Walton, will join the expedition in Pennsylvania; Halfback Bob Nussbaumer heads a group of six getting on in Chicago; five more will be picked up in Kansas City and two in Newton, Kans.; Sammy Baugh and possibly Dick Todd get on in Amarillo, Tex., and the final group of 19 players will be met in Los Angeles.

Preceding the departure the Junior Board of Commerce will honor the Redskins with a luncheon Thursday at the Mayflower Hotel.

After three weeks of strenuous workouts, Redskin candidates get their first taste of action August 22 when they are divided into two teams for the sixth annual East vs. West Intra-Squad game at Long Beach. Exhibitions at Los Angeles, Denver and Birmingham will be played before the team returns here for the Variety Club clash with the Chicago Bears at Baltimore on September 19.

TIDE RIPS, $14.00, $5.40, $3.80; VERTIGO II, $8.60, $6.00; BUG JUICE, $4.00.

TIDE RIPS, away alertly, went to the front and, taken in hand, shook off ARTIST LIFE just beyond the half mile, opened a gap rounding the last turn and went on the win easily. VERTIGO II, far back early, made a bid around the turn but failed to gain on the winner through stretch. BUG JUICE, within striking distance of the leaders at all times, drifted out at top of stretch, took VERTIGO II out with him and then hung in closing stages. STYMIE, lacking early speed as usual, closed some ground making the last turn and then failed to come on when put to a hard drive in home stretch. KHYBER PASS had no mishap. ARTIST LIFE had good early speed. TURBINE quit.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $3000. For 3-year-old fillies and mares; claiming. Start good. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 5:56. Off at 5:56½. Winner, Mrs. J. M. Double-Barrel Celebration

Kenneth Royalls Entertain, Honoring Gen., Mrs. Bradley

By Marie McNair

THE BAND played everything but "Yankee Doodle" at Secretary of the Army and Mrs. Kenneth Royall's reception yesterday afternoon in the Chinese Room at the Mayflower Hotel.

Honor guests were the Chief of Staff, Gen. Omar Bradley, and Mrs. Bradley, and among the 800 guests invited were members of the Cabinet, a sprinkling of diplomats, military leaders, the White House staff, and the chairmen of the various committees of the Senate and the House.

Aside from having distinguished honor guests at their party, the Royalls were also having a double-barreled celebration—the Secretary's fifty-fourth birthday anniversary and the first anniversary of the date on which he took his oath of office.

Gala was the word for it yesterday. The personal flags of the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of the Army flew their colors. Red, white and blue flowers decorated the reception room and the ballroom where there was a huge buffet, and the United States Army Band dance orchestra played from their station in the balcony.

MRS. ROYALL

Mrs. Royall, who comes from North Carolina, likes to do things the Southern way. Which means that the large group of friends who assisted her wore summery frocks with long skirts.

Mrs. Royall herself was in delicate blue Alencon lace just the color of her eyes. Mrs. Omar Bradley wore a cool looking gray marquisette. Mrs. Joseph Binns of New York, who is visiting Mrs. Royall for the weekend and who was in the receiving line too, had chosen a green and white flowered print with a skirt of chalk white crepe. All three wore orchids pinned to their necklines.

Mrs. Tom Clark, wife of the Attorney General, Mrs. John W. Snyder, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, and Drucie Snyder were among those asked to assist.

Senators' wives who've returned for the special session and were lending a hand at the party were Mrs. John McClellan and Mrs. Chapman Revercomb. Also assisting were Mrs. Gordon Gray, wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Army; Mrs. Tracy S. Voorhees, Mrs. George Mesta, down from Newport for the event; Mrs. William Pauley, Mrs. John M. Wier, Mrs. Roscoe B. Woodruff, Mrs. George Holmes, Mrs. W. D. Crittenberger, Mrs. L. V. Roberts, Mrs. Wade H. Haislip, Mrs. Edward Banks Gibson, Mrs. Albert Cox, Mrs. Murray Borden, Mrs. William Stroud, Mrs. Kenneth Young, Mrs. Alfred Jonniaux. Mrs. James E. Davis of New York, daughter of the hosts; Mrs. Kenneth Royall, jr., of Durham, N. C. and Mrs. Henry S. Beukema, daughter of General and Mrs. Bradley, were among the young people assisting. Then, too there were Mrs. Jones Yorke, sister of Mrs. Royall, and Mrs. William Carraway, all of North Carolina, and Miss Martha Edmonston of Highlands, in the same State.

All the Cabinet members and their wives were there with the exception of Secretary of the Treasury Snyder, who is out of town, and Mrs. Forrestal, wife of the Secretary of Defense, who is also away.

Chief Justice and Mrs. Fred Vinson and Deputy Chief of Staff and Mrs. J. Lawton Collins were in the gathering and just to name a few others there were Lieut. Gen. and Mrs. Henry S. Aurand, Maj. Gen. and Mrs. H. L. Bull, Justice and Mrs. Harold Burton, Gen. and Mrs. Jacob Devers, up from Fort Monroe; and Lieut. Gen. and Mrs. Leonard Gerow, here from Fort Meade.

The French Ambassador and Mme. Bonnet came and also Fleet Admiral William D. Leahy and the John Steelmans—he's the President's No. 1 assistant.

Then there were Gen. Albert Cox, and Mrs. Cox and Mrs. Louis Denfeld, wife of the Chief of Naval Operations, who told inquiring friends her husband is out of town. William H. Draper, jr., Undersecretary of the Army, was there and Undersecretary of State and Mrs. Robert Lovett, Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. John L. Sullivan, and Stuart Symington, Secretary of the Air Force; Lieut. Gen. and Mrs. S. J. Chamberlain, the Undersecretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Edward H. Foley, jr., and Dr. and Mrs. Vannevar Bush.

TOWN TOPICS:—There have been definitions and definitions on what constitutes a gentleman. The Brazilian Ambassador, Marcio Nabuco, has his own—an original idea—and he puts it patly: "A man who is never in a hurry."

Juan Felix Morales, bachelor Ambassador of Paraguay, is anxious to meet the typical American girl.

At a recent dance at the United Nations Club he was told to pick out the one he would like most to know and an introduction would be arranged. After looking the girls over carefully his eyes settled on a rosy cheeked lass with clear blue eyes. She came from the British Isles!

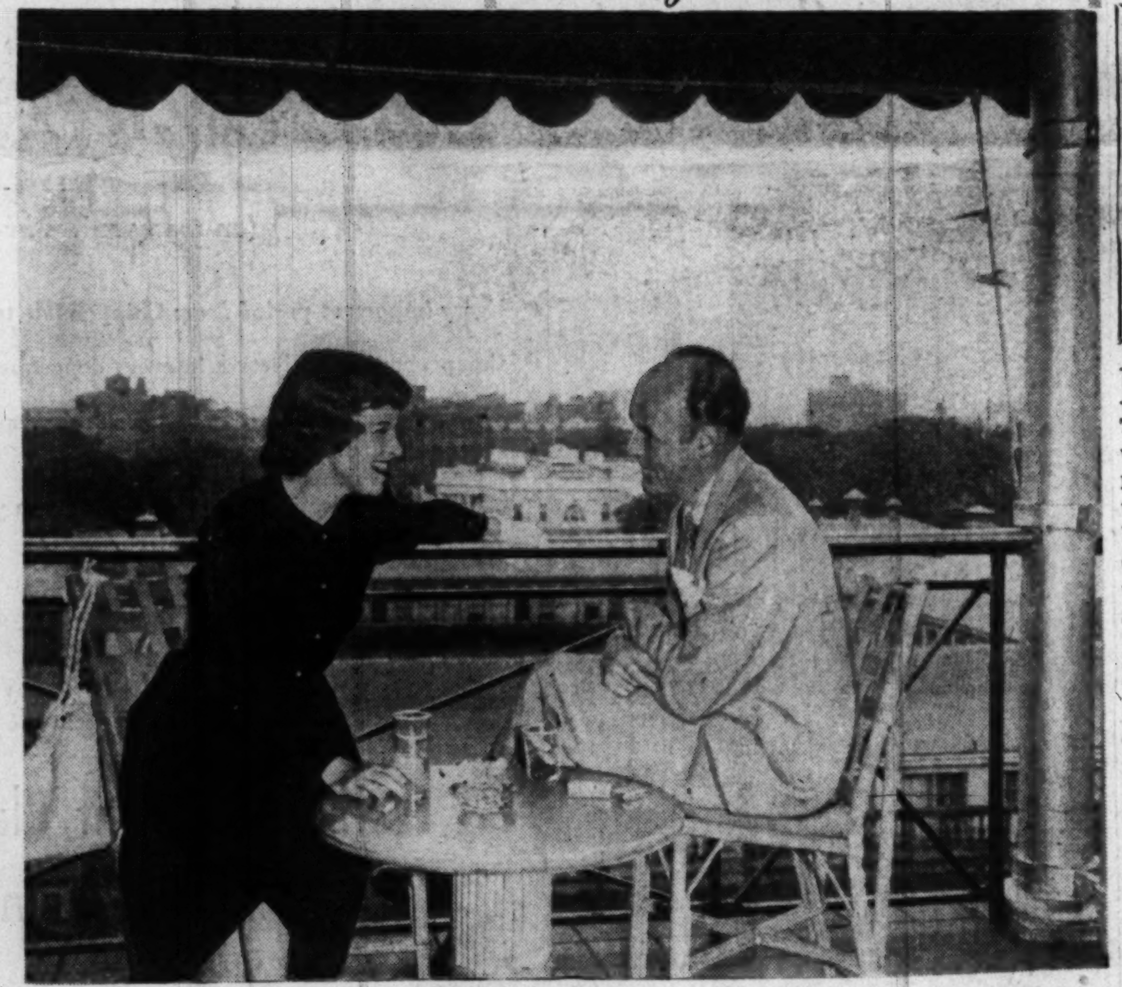
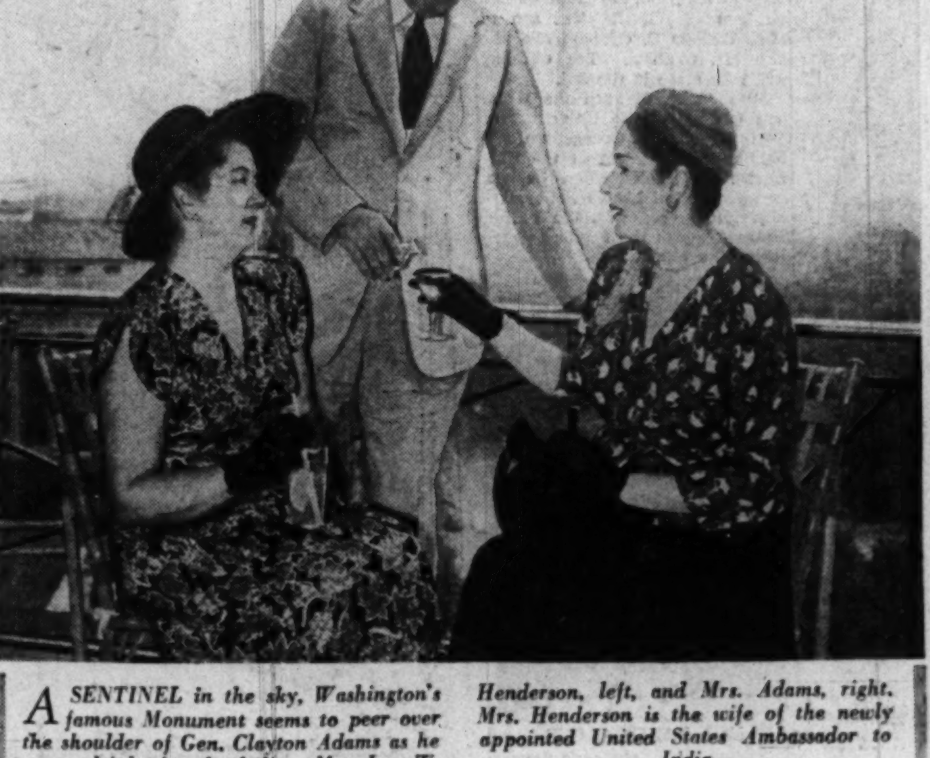
Skyline Vistas

ATOP the Washington Hotel there's a breeze-swept porch looking down over Washington's hot and busy streets. Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hutchinson, jr., head for it when they're in town from their pleasant country place at Laurel Park, Md., and have finished their day's errands. Here they are having a cool drink before dinner



THE Capital skyline unfolds as a backdrop for Charles and Eleanor Hurd as they sip drinks a deux on the Washington Hotel roof. Historic buildings—the White House, the stolid State, War and Navy edifice, rise over the porch rail. Mr. Hurd is the author of "Washington Cavalcade," back stage glimpses of what makes the wheels go in the Nation's Capital



A SENTINEL in the sky, Washington's famous Monument seems to peer over the shoulder of Gen. Clayton Adams as he pours drinks for the ladies—Mrs. Loy W. Henderson, left, and Mrs. Adams, right. Mrs. Henderson is the wife of the newly appointed United States Ambassador to India

Status Quo Still Good

Style Settles Down To Acting Like Well-Bred Lady

By Peggy Preston

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 24.—After a week of looking at the fall fashion picture through the rose-colored silk chiffons and laces of those designers who create for about 5 per cent of the American women, we have comforting news to report. Styles for fall, 1948, will preserve the status-quo.

Even in the inner sanctums of the elite couture group we saw no evidence that women will have to buy a new wardrobe this winter. Fashion, thank heaven, has stopped being a troublesome child and settled down to become a nice, well-bred little lady. We have seen real fashion trends set in these magnificent collections, marvelous manipulation of fabrics and line, remarkable ingenuity in the deployment of detail. But there has been no drastic, sudden change of silhouette such as there has been in the past two years.

MISS PRESTON

However, if you are a member of the feminine sex you will, of course, want some of these new fall clothes. Say you are an average Washington woman, with a medium-sized income and a healthy interest in how you look and what you wear. How can you best plan your wardrobe for fall, so that it will contain the most worth-while style items with a minimum amount of expense and excess buying?

First decide on your preferred skirt length—10, 11 or 12 inches from the floor. Then see that everything you own is the same length.

Next pick a basic color. Colors are beautiful and exciting this year and black is no longer an essential factor. The majority of American women are brownettes, with medium fair skin and eyes. If you are in that category, or a real brunette or blonde with brown eyes, then by all means make brown your basic color. It comes in marvelous rich shades and will give your wardrobe more character and warmth than cold, traditional black.

THE exact style and number of costumes you will need depends upon your mode of living. But here are the basic garments you should have in any event:

1. One softly tailored suit, cut with slender skirt, medium-length jacket which buttons high at the collared neckline so that it may be worn as a complete ensemble with a bit of jewelry. This is for the days when you haven't a clean blouse to your name. Wool gabardine or a fine worsted is best for this type of suit, since both these fabrics tailor beautifully, shed lint and dust and slip easily under almost any type of coat. Brown shades in such a suit range from rich cocoa to a gray-like taupe.

2. One cloth coat, with or without fur trim. It should have a fairly large collar and at least three buttons in front, cuffs at the wrists. If you can afford but one coat it is best to steer away from the swing back or princess line. Choose a classic casual with moderate fullness all the way around, a garment that will lend itself to any dress or suit. Colors may be brown, gray, taupe or winter beige.

3. One basic felt hat, small crowned with rounded brim in matching shade, brightened with a colorful feather or band of grosgrain.

4. One pair of brown calfskin shoes with closed heel and toe, medium high heel, either a pump or single-buttoned strap type. Brown calfskin bag and gloves.

5. One jacket dress of sheer wool, with fitted jacket that molds the waistline, forms a peplum around the hips. Skirt of dress can be flared or slim. Here you have two costumes in one and with imagination and clever use of accessories you have innumerable changes. Colors may be gray, brown, green or taupe.

6. One silk crepe in one or another of the above shades. Since this is to be for dress-up occasion

Congressional Capers:

'Turnip' Session Bachelors Returning to Capitol Hill

By Genevieve Reynolds

LOOKS AS IF the town will be teeming with "turnip" session congressional bachelors next week. Majority of the Nation's lawmakers' wives have just moth-balled winter garments, closed their Washington domiciles and landed at vacation spots or in the home States for a bit of VIC (Very Important Constituent) gladhanding. A few were on the high seas. President Truman monkey-wrenched all summer plans when he called Congress back for a special session, opening on what the Chief Executive laughingly termed "Turnip Day."

GOP wives seemed the hardest hit by the interruption, for the largest portion had headed home at the finale of the Republican National Convention. Faring better were a few Democratic Congressional families who were still in the Capital or ensconced in Philadelphia awaiting the outcome of the Democratic National Convention.

A sprinkling of congressional wives will pour into the city today from all sections. Greatest number, however, will decide whether or not to return within the next 10 days. Perchance the torrid session swings into September or November, 90 per cent of the spouses will be on the job looking after the lawmakers' welfare.

MEANTIME, a check on Capitol Hill disclosed that Senator and Mrs. Alexander Wiley of Wisconsin will be back in town today. They had just landed at Honolulu on the first lap of an investigative tour of the Pacific when the announcement came through that Congress was being summoned to duty July 26. Except for the Baby Sitting for Wallace

Family Circle Surrounds Nominee Taylor; Guitars, Banjos Twang in Ballyhoo

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

PHILADELPHIA, July 24.—Late afternoon, we poked into Senator Glen Taylor's sitting room. The third party vice presidential nominee and his wife were out at a radio broadcast but there were plenty of Taylors at home. Three teen-age girls, who identified themselves as "Baby Sitting for Wallace," were grouped around a television set. One was holding 2-year-old Gregory Taylor who was spooning up pablum from a paper cup. The Senator's brother, three years younger but alike as a twin, sat smoking a cigar, and the Taylors' 5-year-old son wandered in and out suitably attired only in brown checked pants.

Blocks, toy automobiles, a casual baby shoe were scattered over the carpet. It was a strange contrast to convention smoke-filled rooms.

"This is my first convention," said the Senator's brother, jotting down our telephone number. Returning at 9:30 we found the Senator and his 13-year-old son were watching a television baseball game—Mrs. Taylor, in a red satin housecoat, was sitting on the sofa while the younger kids played on the floor. "We're going to have a hard day tomorrow so we're going to bed early," said Mrs. Taylor. The Senator, smoking a long cigar, moved to the sofa. Between them they told the Horatio Alger story of their married life.

Dora, of Great Falls, Mont., married Taylor, who ran his own show business playing in small theaters, halls, school auditoriums throughout the West. Twenty-five were in the original company but as the depression grew worse they dwindled to four—the Taylors, his brother and sister-in-law.

Political Career Began in '38

IN 1938 the banjo-playing showman determined on a political career because "so many were starving amidst plenty." He was defeated for nomination as Congressman that year, for senatorial nomination in 1940 and 1942.

"We kept on," said slim, brunette Mrs. Taylor, "because each campaign Glen gained a bit. It took us just about two years after each campaign to get out of debt again."

"In between times we'd take our scenery out of storage," continued the Senator, "borrow a few bucks and start on the road again. During the war, I worked in an aviation factory."

"We campaigned in an old Ford," the Senator reminisced, "we built a platform on top, where we gave our show, and lived through the campaign inside the car. We tacked some boards together in front and our oldest son, who was five, slept on them. We were so broke we lived on peaches and oatmeal cookies." Mrs. Taylor nodded. "Since then I've been fighting for what I believe and if I'd kept my mouth shut instead of coming out for Wallace I probably could remain a Senator the rest of my life," the Senator continued.

The Senator's views seemed a bit hazy to the politically uninitiated so we sounded out Dora Taylor about their recent vacation spent fishing in Yellowstone Park, asked casually if she had any hobby. Mrs. Taylor hesitated. The 13-year-old Taylor turned from television, "her hobby is kids," he said with a grin. Gregory, grabbing the middle brother's fist, staggered off to bed. "I help all I can in the campaigns," Mrs. Taylor said, walking to the door with me, "I believe in my husband and so political life's not so bad."

Party Symbols on Carousel

DOWN ON THE street ballyhoo was picking up. A sound truck was parked in front of the Bellevue-Stratford. On it was an almost full size carousel with cardboard elephants and donkeys and a neat painted legend, "The Same Merry-Go-Round." On the chassis was plastered a banner reading "For Peace and Security Get on the People's Bandwagon." A few yards away a handsome young pair of hitch-hikers were happily barricaded by photographers. Their spiel highlighted a four-day journey from Phoenix, Ariz., all on a $42 kitty. The gal, her very blond hair piled high, bluejeans rolled becomingly at midcalf, knapsack slung nonchalantly, had tarried long enough in the Bellevue-Stratford ladies' room to apply lipstick, pin several hundred curls in place.

The lobby echoed to the twang of banjo and guitar as a brace of teen-agers thumped into the chorus of Henry Wallace's song, played to the old revival hymn, "Stand Up and Be Counted."

On the roof top ballroom, Henry Wallace was

Adm., Mrs. Griffin Return From Japan

By Nicha Soure

ADMIRAL AND MRS. ROBERT M. GRIFFIN have returned to Washington and joined a big and unexclusive group of Capital newcomers. They're members of the house-hunting fraternity.

Since 1943 Admiral Griffin was stationed in Japan as commander of naval forces, Far East. After a 30-day leave he will begin his new duty as president of the Naval Retiring and Examining Board. But that leave has to be spent profitably with Admiral Griffin looking for a home. His family consists of Mrs. Griffin, Mimi, Robert, jr., and daughter Patricia, who is now Mrs. Frank Sterrett.

THE JANGOS forgot all business on hand yesterday and had a purely social affair in the guise of a picnic. They drove to the Coast Guard Radio Station and enjoyed softball, horseshoes, badminton, volleyball, tennis and shooting.

The important event, the menu, included hot dogs, baked beans and cantaloupe. Enjoying the fare were the young marrieds and the over 18's.

The new Junior Army and Navy Guild Organization president, Mrs. John H. Neill, jr., was there having her share of the fun. Mrs. Neill is the young lady who once said, "Before I die I am going to be a blonde, redhead and a brunette!" and carried out her threat.

On New Year's Eve she was a brunette, two months ago she was a redhead for a short time and today she is back to her natural dark blonde-hair. Not everyone could carry out a promise like that, but Mrs. Neill is blessed with gray eyes and a fair complexion which aided her resolution.

She has been married six and a half years but has never cooked a meal. However, she can sew, which might be attributed to the fact that in her native Alabama it is too hot to cook or be athletic when one can sit on a porch and embroider.

The Neills came to Washington four years ago from Montgomery, Ala. Mrs. Neill attended Sophie Newcomb College of Tulane University and later Tulane where she met her husband. At the University of Alabama she did some graduate work, and later took the Grand Tour.

Active in the Junior League of Washington, she was one of the performers in the television show, "Playtime." Mrs. Neill became interested in marionettes while working with the league and has continued putting on performances at home for the benefit of her 4-year-old son, John 3d, and the children of the neighborhood.

Mr. Neill is an economist on the Federal Reserve Board of Governors and a student at George Washington University, working toward a Ph.D. in economics. He is a major in the financial department of the Army Reserve, which is Mrs. Neill's link with the JANGOS.

For this fall, Mrs. Neill says, the JANGOS plan a dramatic and choral group which will have professional coaching. They will be "practicing" on each other at first with hopes of displaying their talents to the public at a later date.

IT WILL be the last event of a six-week session for the Reserve Officer Training Corps cadets at Fort Belvoir when they meet for the graduation dance. The formal ball will be held July 29 at Woodlawn Hall with the Bolling Field Air Force Band suppying the music.

Among the guests will be Gen. Douglas L. Weart, commanding general of Fort Belvoir, and the ROTC company and other high-ranking officers.

At the final review Thursday afternoon, the cadets will receive second lieutenant's commissions in the Army Reserve and on Friday, July 30, the cadets will return to their homes.

LaBells Entertain At Fairfax Home

Mr. and Mrs. O. J. LaBell entertained informally at their home, LaBellmont, in Fairfax, Va., Friday evening.

There was dancing on the terrace where refreshments were also served and a bar had been set up.

About 80 guests were entertained.

Diplomatic Circling

By Elizabeth Maguire

WASHINGTON withers and wilts during the month of July. And if everyone who could were to go away, the town's social life would take on a decided droop. However, there is a freshness in new personalities and politics here that keeps everyone happy.

Over 1000 guests turned up at the Polish Embassy reception Thursday evening, including leading diplomats and top residential society. The function celebrated the national holiday of free Poland, established after the First World War. The Ambassador and Mme. Winiewicz agreed that hereafter national holidays should be declared in the dead of winter.

Lady Franks, wife of the British Ambassador, and Mme. Fuchss, wife of the Swiss Commercial Counselor, had a chat at the fete. The former is leaving for Nantucket today and the latter for Newport.

Tommy Thompson of the State Department had a long talk with the Russian Ambassador, Alexander S. Panyushkin, and they were joined later by the Burmese Ambassador, U So Nyun. Mme. Panyushkin, it was learned, has returned to Moscow after a short stay in the Capital.

Mme. Jutila, wife of the Finnish Minister, did not attend the reception with her husband, but remained at home in an air-cooled room. The Minister confided that it never gets like this in Helsingfors.

Guests remained at the Polish reception until well after midnight, enjoying music in the drawing room, and a delectable buffet supper in the ballroom.

Earlier in the day on Thursday, Sir Homi and Lady Mody of India entertained at a small cocktail party at their suite in the Shoreham Hotel. The lovely hostess wore bois de rose chiffon embroidered in gold and "chic de Molyneux" perfume.

Sir C. V. Raman, Indian expert on physics and finance, was a guest, also the popular Mme. Nehru, wife of the Indian Charge d'Affaires. Mr. and Mrs. Loy Henderson were surrounded with members of the Indian Embassy staff, who are very happy over the choice of Mr. Henderson as Ambassador to their country.

A dinner party the same evening was given by the Belgian Attache and Mme. Paternotte de La Vaillee at their home in Wesley Heights. Maj. Count Yvan Du Monceau de Bergendal, Military Attache of the Belgian Embassy, has returned to Washington with his bride, the former Miss Lorraine Manville Dresselhuys of New York, and they are making their home in Alexandria.

MRS. CARL A. RUYS
. . . Lake George honeymoon

Miss Goslinga Is Married to Carl A. Ruys

Miss Tilly Goslinga became the bride of Carl A. Ruys yesterday at 11 a. m. in the Sixth Presbyterian Church, the Rev. Franklin Earl Fowler officiating. The bride is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. J. Goslinga, director of education, Curacao, Netherlands West Indies. The bridegroom is the son of Dr. and Mrs. A. C. N. P. Ruys, judge of the Amsterdam Court of Appeals in Amsterdam, the Netherlands.

The bride was given in marriage by Dr. J. W. Beyen, executive director for the Netherlands and Union of South Africa International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. She wore a white suit and carried white orchids and white roses.

Miss Mimi Goslinga of New York, the bride's sister, was the maid of honor, wearing a coral dress. Fons Jockin, assistant loan officer for the International Bank, served as best man.

Following the reception the couple left for a wedding trip to Lake George, N. Y. On their return they will reside at 207 Leighton ave., Silver Spring, Md.

The bride attended college at Curacao and served two years in the Royal Netherlands Indies Army as nurse in the Pacific. Formerly with The Netherlands Embassy in Washington, she is now the secretary of Dr. Beyen.

The bridegroom received his LL.D. degree from Amsterdam University in The Netherlands and during the war served in the Netherlands resistance movement. He is now a staff member of the International Bank.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Nordlinger are at Belgrade, Maine, for a short stay, having gone to visit their two sons, who are at camp there.

Miss McGavack to Be Bride Of Arthur Jenkins Aug. 28

Leesburg, Va., July 24.—Miss Betty Clapham McGavack, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis M. McGavack of Waterford, has set Saturday, August 28, as the date for her marriage to Arthur S. Jenkins, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur S. Jenkins of Leesburg. The wedding will take place at 6:30 o'clock in the evening in the Catoctin Presbyterian Church, Waterford; the pastor, the Rev. Henry L. Willis, officiating. A reception will follow at Edgegrove, the prospective bride's home.

Miss McGavack is a graduate of Virginia Intermont College, Bristol, Va., and during the past session taught in Jane's Kindergarten, Hamilton, Va. Mr. Jenkins, after having served three years in the Army Air Corps, has resumed his studies in metallurgical engineering at Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

Mr. and Mrs. Winslow Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene F. O'Connor 3d, and Commonwealth's Attorney Stirling M. Harrison motored to Bethany Beach, Del. to spend the weekend with Mrs. Charles F. Harrison and Mrs. Stirling Harrison, who are at the beach for the month of July. They were joined by Mr. and Mrs. Louis Grammer of Philadelphia, for the weekend visit.

Granville R. Hutchison, who has been visiting in Leesburg for several months with his sister, Miss Nellie Hutchison, and brother, Lawrence S. Hutchison, sailed on Thursday from San Francisco on the President Monroe for Manila, Philippine Islands, where he has a position with the branch bank of the National City Bank of New York. En route he will visit Hawaii, China, and Japan. At the latter place he will be the guest of Gen. Douglas MacArthur, with whom he served in the Military Government division during the war.

Mr. and Mrs. Leigh Walter Hunt of Washington were guests on Wednesday of Mr. and Mrs. Cadle Hooppaw at their home, Windy Hill, near Leesburg. A family birthday supper party was given as a surprise to Mrs. Hooppaw, who was observing her anniversary at this time. The Hooppaws' daughter, Mrs. Roland T. Bryan, and the latter's small son, Carroll Bryan, of Alliance, Ohio, will arrive August 2 for a three weeks' visit. They will be joined later by Mr.

MRS. MERTON ENGLISH, Jr., of Chevy Chase, completes an apron which will be on sale on the fancy-work table at the Montgomery County Hospital benefit at Sandy Spring Tuesday. There'll also be homemade jams, jellies and pickles, antiques, fresh fruits and vegetables, potted plants and cut flowers among offerings in the "country store" and at stands in the Sherwood High School yard

MRS. FREDERIC S. GILPIN of Sandy Spring, and Mrs. J. W. Barnsley of Olney, take time out from preparations for the Montgomery County General Hospital benefit picnic to sample some of the food that will be served. That's real, hickory smoked country ham Mrs. Barnsley is slicing. Thirty cooked hams like this one, all cured by Osburn Stabler of Sunnyside, near Sandy Spring, will be sold in sandwiches or in packaged slices next Tuesday at the benefit at Sandy Spring. Mrs. Gilpin is general chairman for the benefit and Mrs. Barnsley is in charge of the home project

Famed Benefit Picnic Goes Modern

By Lucia Brown

The annual benefit picnic given to raise money for the Montgomery County General Hospital is going modern this year—but not too modern!

There will still be old ham on the menu—light mahogany in color and deep South in flavor—on Tuesday, July 27, at the high school grounds in Sandy Spring. Chicken, homemade pies and layer cake will be served, too, and there'll be lemonade, fudge and freshly made candy.

But the chicken and ham will be in sandwiches this year, a series of 12 food bars will be set up for serving the succulent fare, and everything will be "a la carte." You can buy just as much or as little as you want and take it to a long table under the shade trees for eating purposes.

Reason for the change is that last year's method of serving a plate of hot fried chicken, sliced ham and vegetables to seated guests proved a woman-killing task. Frying chicken and waiting table for 2000 is really something on a hot summer day! The Women's Board of the Montgomery County Hospital decided streamlining was in order so that guests this year could be served more quickly and easily.

There'll be new features this year, too, to add to the fun. The Sandy Spring Singers will present a program of spirituals, ballads, and other favorite songs at 8 p. m.

At 2 p. m.—when the benefit officially opens next Tuesday—there'll be a baseball game between Sandy Spring and Colesville. The Browningsville band will play and one of the most popular features of the annual benefits, pony rides for children, will start. There will be movies for the youngsters, too, later in the evening.

Antiques—everything from a pewter mold to mahogany chests and a 25-gallon copper kettle—will be sold in the "antique shop" in the meeting house. There'll be a "country store" on the grounds, where packages of beaten biscuit, sliced country ham, homemade preserves, pickles, and jellies, and fresh vegetables and fruits will be sold. A fancy work table will feature aprons and potted plants and cut flowers will be on sale. A "grab bag" will also lend an element of surprise to the "trading."

Members of the steering committee directing this year's benefit are: Mrs. Frederic S. Gilpin, general chairman; Mrs. Henry DeC. Adams, president of the Women's board of the hospital; Mrs. W. Arthur Carr, Mrs. R. B. Chichester, Mrs. A. D. Farquhar, Mrs. J. Justus Meyer, jr., Mrs. William John Thomas, Mrs. C. C. Tumbleson, and Mrs. Charles W. Williams. Chairman of the men's committee is William H. Gilpin and vice chairman, R. Rowland Stabler.

"M-M-M, but that looks good!" Mrs. Henry De Coursey Adams of 7938 West Beach dr. nw., has an interested—and hungry—audience in 11-year-old Betty Patricia English as she makes pies for the Montgomery County General Hospital benefit next Tuesday. Mrs. Adams is president of the women's board of the hospital, which sponsors the benefit picnic in the Sherwood High School grounds at Sandy Spring

Tennis Tourney Members Are Feted

Annapolis, Md., July 24.—Participants in the All-Navy Tennis Tournament, concluded here last week, were guests of honor at a buffet supper held Saturday night by the Naval Academy Athletic Association. The party was at the Boat House, an ideal location for a warm weather entertainment.

Officers and their wives from naval air activities and naval air facilities enjoyed a get-together at the North Severn Officers' Mess Thursday. Cocktails were followed by dinner and dancing. The party was also in the nature of a welcome to newly assigned officers of the group and their wives, some of whom are: Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. R. C. Tyluki, Lieut. and Mrs. T. Elester, Lieut. F. H. Markey, Lieut. (j. g.) and Mrs. C. L. Jrejci, Lieut. (j. g.) and Mrs. G. D. Bradberry, and Lieut. (j. g.) and Mrs. A. Neil.

Gibson Island will be opened to the public for the benefit of St. Christopher-by-the-Sea Protestant Episcopal Church on Tuesday, July 27. The island is usually closed to nonmembers unless they are guests of residents or members. Cochairmen of the fair are Mrs. Alexander M. Norris and Mrs. Page Edmunds. Mrs. Thomas J. Nelson, jr., will be in charge of the program for children, which is to include boat rides, swimming and games. Mrs. William E. Lamble is in charge of reservations for the noon to 2 p. m. buffet lunch at the clubhouse. This will be followed by a card party, and in the evening a buffet supper, in charge of Mrs. J. Miller Sherwood, will be served. The program will be completed with a surprise entertainment under the direction of Mrs. William H. Moore, 3d, and Mrs. John R. Sherwood, jr.

The garden of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Benner, of St. Margaret's, was the scene of the wedding on Saturday of Mrs. Benner's sister, Miss Edna Mae Bishop, and W. Ray Peddicord, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Peddicord, of Annapolis.

The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. C. Wood, pastor of the College Avenue Baptist Church. Mrs. William Sturgis, sister of the bride, was matron of honor, and Frank Tomanio, of Annapolis, best man. After a wedding reception, the couple left for a trip South. They will occupy an apartment on St. Margaret's rd.

Lieut. Lawrence Heyworth, jr., USN, and Mrs. Heyworth have announced the birth of a son, Lawrence Heyworth, 3d, on July 10 at the Naval Hospital, Annapolis.

Wedding Bells Ring

Miss Sarah Nannette Hale, daughter of Judge and Mrs. Winfield Berry Hale of Rogersville, Tenn., became the bride yesterday of Herman Albert Dayton, son of Mrs. Hughes Dayton of Kent, Conn., and the late Dr. Dayton. The ceremony was performed in the Rogersville Presbyterian Church, the Rev. John T. Thomas officiating.

In the absence of her father, who is in Nurenberg, Germany, Winfield Berry Hale, jr., gave his sister in marriage. She wore a gown of ivory slipper satin and carried a bouquet of gardenias, orchids and stephanotis. Her veil of illusion was held by a lace cap.

Mrs. Richard F. Brewer was matron of honor and the bridesmaids were Mrs. D. M. Alexander and Miss Nora Jones. J. Henry Hoskinson served as best man and the ushers were Bernard S. Van Rensselaer and John Price Brew.

Following the reception at the home of the bride, the couple left for a wedding trip to Sea Island, Ga., and Holderness, N. H. On their return they will reside in Washington.

The bride attended Corcoran School of Art and Mary Baldwin College in Staunton, Va. She was graduated from Katharine Gibbs School in New York. Her husband graduated from the Kent School for Boys in Connecticut and studied in Germany under an International Fellowship.

Cambrey—Cornfield

Miss Jean Harriett Cornfield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Cornfield of Washington, became the bride yesterday of William George Cambrey, son of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Cambrey also of Washington. The ceremony was performed in the Takoma Baptist Church, the Rev. Clayton Waddell officiating.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a navy dress and hat with pink accessories. She carried an arm bouquet of pink roses.

Cunningham—Seebode

St. Gabriel's Catholic Church was the scene yesterday of the marriage of the Miss Mary Lou Seebode, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Fred Seebode of Washington, and Mark Leo Cunningham, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham, also of Washington. The Rev. Roeder officiated at the morning ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore an ivory satin and Chantilly lace gown. Gladioli on her headpiece held her veil of illusion and she carried a bouquet of white gladioli and white orchids.

Miss Mary Ann Cunningham sister of the bridegroom, attended the bride as maid of honor. The bridesmaids were Miss Mary Beller, Mrs. James J. Lynagh, Miss Sue Logan and Miss Fosker Gianneschi. Thomas Ladbush served as best man. The ushers were Francis Clyde Teawalt, John P. Minogue, James J. Lynagh and William F. Seebode, jr.

Following a reception at the Catholic Daughters Club, the couple left for a wedding trip to Atlantic City. On their return they will reside at Hyattsville, Md.

During the war, the bridegroom served three years with the Coast Guard.

Starry—Simpson

Trinity Methodist Church was the scene of the marriage yesterday of Miss Dorothy Elizabeth Simpson and Joseph Leroy Starry, the Rev. Daniel Justice officiating. The bride is the daughter of Charles Raymond Simpson of Washington and the late Mrs. Simpson and her husband is the son of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Starry of Shepherdstown, W. Va.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a powder blue crepe afternoon dress with gold and white accessories and a white rose corsage. Miss Betty Jane Morales of Hyattsville, cousin of the bride, was maid of honor. Silas Starry served his brother as best man.

Following the reception in the Victory Room of the Roosevelt Hotel, the couple left for a wedding trip to Ocean City, Md. On their return they will reside at 406 6th st. se.

Davis—Dorman

Miss Mildred Jacqueline Dorman of Arlington, Va., and Dr. William Columbus Davis, jr., of Falls Church, Va., were married yesterday at noon in Christ Church, Alexandria. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Dennis Betenbough of Shamrock, Tex. Dr. Davis is the son of Mrs. William C. Davis of Birmingham and Jasper, Ala., and the late Lieutenant Governor Davis.

Will Rogers gave the bride in marriage and Mrs. William R. Pole, jr., of Washington was her only attendant. James I. Gillespie of Birmingham, Ala., brother-in-law of the bridegroom, was best man.

After September 15 Dr. and Mrs. Davis will reside in Athens, Ga., where Dr. Davis will be a member of the faculty of the University of Georgia.

Gray Hair?

RE-COLOR it with Canute Water

A few applications of this delightful beauty aid will recolor your gray hair completely — similar to its former natural shade. In one day if you wish — gradually if you prefer. Then primp just once a month to KEEP it young looking. Do not confuse Canute Water with tints or rinses that wash off. Shampooing actually improves the rich, warm new color and leaves your hair fresh, clean and natural to the touch. You may even curl it or get a permanent, if you wish.

No Other Product Can Make All These Claims

Skin test NOT needed. Colorless and crystal-clear. Proved harmless at one of America's Greatest Universities. Thirty years without injury to a single user.

Is it any wonder that leading dealers in most of America's Largest Cities sell more Canute Water than all other hair colorings combined! At drug stores everywhere.

'Blithe Spirit' to Be Given

Capital Favorites Play At Rehoboth Theater

By Virginia Cullen

Rehoboth Beach, Del., July 24.—The Washington colony at Rehoboth Beach is meeting again some of their old little theater favorites who are appearing here at the Henlopen Playhouse. In the Noel Coward play, "Blithe Spirit," opening for a fortnight on Monday, and starring Neil Hamilton of the movies, Miss Geneva Helm, who has worked in the Bailey's Crossroads Theater, will have the choice role of Madame Acardi. During the war Miss Helm lived three years in Washington, working with the State Department and with the Civic Theater.

Two others in the Henlopen Players resident company are Charles Steinmetz, a product of the Catholic University's drama department, and Byron Rash, now studying at the university, who has appeared with the Alexandria Little Theater and at the King-Smith Playhouse. After leaving here Steinmetz will go as director of the Macon-Little Theater. He and Rash had major roles in "Separate Rooms," starring the former burlesque queen, Ann Corio, which closed a two-week engagement tonight.

Mrs. John Frank Steele of Washington has arrived at Rehoboth Beach to occupy her new cottage she has built at 49 Oak Avenue. With her are her two daughters, Mrs. Gordon MacDonald and Mrs. James B Wescott of Washington, and three grandsons. Their guests this weekend are Mr. and Mrs. Gayle Griswold of Atlanta, Ga. Miss Dorothy Johnson of Washington will visit them next weekend.

Mrs. Reardon Young and daughters, Mary Elizabeth and Amelia Ann, are enjoying a vacation here at the Star-of-the-Sea Hotel on the boardwalk.

General Spaatz Is Visitor

Gen. Carl A. Spaatz, retired chief of the U. S. Air Forces, has been a visitor at Rehoboth Beach with Col. Henry Berliner, whose family is now occupying the Berliner Cottage here. General Spaatz has been pursuing his favorite pastime, marlin fishing, out of Ocean City, Md., and Indian River Inlet.

With thousands of sportsmen flocking here for the summer fishing, a great addition to the sport this summer is the new Indian River Inlet Trailer Park that the Delaware State Highway Department has just opened on the north side of the inlet, 10 miles south of Rehoboth Beach. The park is located on a 10-acre plot, state-owned land. It was largely accomplished for the huge fishermen and tourist element through the foresight of H. Fletcher Brown of Wilmington, and the late A. Felix duPont of Rehoboth, and Frank V. duPont, chairman of the State Highway Commission.

Mr. and Mrs. Julius Davidson of Washington are spending weekends here at the Mary Ann Inn on Olive Avenue.

Dr. and Mrs. John F. Martin, who have been visiting Mrs. Martin's mother, Mrs. James H. Hughes, wife of former United States Senator Hughes, have gone to Quantico, Va. Mrs. Hughes has been active with her new duties as Democratic committeewoman from Delaware.

Miss Lucie Mortimer, retired Washington educator, who is at her summer home at Rehoboth Beach, is entertaining the Misses Annie C. and Margaret J. Keliher of Washington, who are here for a vacation of two weeks.

The "Washington Colony" at Indian Beach on the southern outskirts of Rehoboth is doing much entertaining of summer guests. Mrs. John E. Parker is now here with her mother, Mrs. John L. Edwards. The John E. Parker juniors, and Mr. and Mrs. William Rohrman of Washington, are their weekend house guests.

Mrs. Smith Entertains

Mrs. John Lewis Smith of Washington, one of the first dwellers at the Indian Beach Colony of many years standing, entertained this week Dr. and Mrs. Edgar Snowden and other guests from the Capital. This afternoon she is giving a large party with the arrival of the family of her son, John L. Smith, jr. General and Mrs. Sadler of Lehigh, Pa., are other guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Brockett Muir are also settled at their Indian Beach cottage for the rest of the season, as well as Mr. and Mrs. Robert V. Fleming and family, Capital residents, who are entertaining Mr. and Mrs. William Renchard of Long Island.

The Ambassador from Guatemala, Ismael Gonzale-Arevalo, his wife and children, have arrived for a stay until September 16, and have leased the Nowland Cottage on Munson st.

The Netherlands Embassy is represented by the family of J. B. Ritzema van Ikema, agricultural attache, who has taken the Morgan cottage on Dewey Beach.

Dates were announced this week for two of the most important social functions of the summer season. The annual Lifeguard Ball, honoring the 18 members of the beach patrol and their captain, Dr. P. S. Burnham, will be held on August 10 at the Rehoboth Beach Country Club.

The Rehoboth Art League Bal Masque, which is the social climax of the league's summer season, will be at the Country Club on August 20. Both will be held on the open terrace of the club, overlooking the golf course. In deference to St. Swithin, who on July 15 predicted more inclement weather, rain dates have also been named.

Many Wives Not Returning For Session

"come back signal" the two would have continued for a look-see at Guam, Japan and Tokyo.

HAWAII'S Delegate Joseph R. Farrington and his dynamic helpmate, Betty, just about had time to embark from the Lurline when the unwelcome tidings were received. Popular Joe will fly in today but Betty will remain home, at least for the time being.

She'll be busy political fence mending both for Mr. Farrington and the GOP in general. Incidentally, Mrs. Farrington spark plugged the organization of the Hawaiian Federation of Republican Women's Clubs last summer.

Alaska's Delegate and Mrs. E. L. Bartlett, who are Democrats, were still in the Washington area when the special session announcement was issued. Luckily, they are spared the long trek backward from their home in Juneau. For the past few days they have been visiting the Delegate's mother in Nelson, Wis., but will be here for the congressional roll call Monday.

Dolores Bridges, alert spouse of New Hampshire's powerful Senator Styles Bridges, had the summer all mapped out with speech-making engagements across the home State. She'll stick to her schedule, extra session notwithstanding. However, if the session runs into fall, she will join Styles as soon as possible.

Chances are that Mrs. Raymond Baldwin, wife of the Connecticut Senator, won't return to the Capital, for the "turnip day" doings. Again, all depends on the length of the pow-wow. Anyway, she'll stay in the home State through August.

GEORGE AND MATALIE GRANT, together with their two children, were all packed to head for the Representative's home in Alabama. With the request of President Truman to put Congress back to work, they decided to stay put here, except for a weekend jaunt to New York.

A further check among the Alabama contingent found Senator and Mrs. John Sparkman still in Washington after the Democratic conclave. Both are doing a little sightseeing around Williamsburg but will be on hand tonight. Mrs. Lister Hill, wife of the Senator, is down in the home State. Before returning to their abode here, she'll wait and see how long the session lasts. Mrs. Frank Boykin, wife of the Representative, isn't expected back at present. Neither does Mrs. George William Andrews plan to return yet. She and the Representative managed to sandwich in a couple weeks' vacation in Florida before the clarion call to duty came.

CURRENTLY in Chicago are Senator and Mrs. Wayland Brooks. No word to date has been heard from Mary on the return subject. Nor does anyone have the answer regarding Mrs. Eugene Millikin, wife of the Colorado Senator. All bets are on the premise that she will stay in Colorado, where she has just arrived.

TWO Senatorial wives—politically on opposite poles—who will be on hand for the high tempered "turnip day" opening will be Mildred Pepper and Katie Malone. Katie, spouse of Nevada's toga wearer, George Malone, didn't have one minute to get to the home State. All her plans definitely were interrupted. Mildred was in Philadelphia for the Democratic Convention so didn't have her plans too shattered.

Mrs. Thayer Writes of Third Party—From Page 1

blandly conducting one of the most acerbic press conferences in recent political history. The huge room, guarded by motorcycle cops with pistol-bulging hips, was wedged tight with ordinary and many extraordinary members of the press, many Negroes, representatives of the Palestine underground, press Communist publications and such forthright writers as Dorothy Thompson, Westbrook Pegler, Rebecca West, many times Socialist candidate Norman Thomas. Miss Thompson, in smart black and white print, was flushed with suppressed emotion. Miss West, in dark green and wide-brimmed brown felt hat, was only slightly less repressed, while Messrs. Pegler and Thomas, once the exhibition was done, sounded off with considerable energy.

On the platform, trim in blue suit and tie, Wallace slipped from under 99 out of a hundred questions with Houdini-like skill.

LUNCHEON, Mrs. Wallace and Mrs. Taylor gave a conference for ladies of the press followed by an "at home" for Wallace women. A handful of women reporters and one persistent male teetered on gilt chairs. Charming Mrs. Wallace, in cool pale yellow, sat beside Mrs. Elinor Gimbel who did most of the talking.

In a gentle voice Mrs. Wallace told how her husband grew gladioluses and many strawberries for seed while "I kind of walk around."

Mrs. Gimbel, black hair abristle above tanned face, answered political questions in brisk staccato. A green orchid was pinned to the shoulder of her well-cut, expensive, navy blue shantung dress, her stockingless, brightly enameled toes were thrust into flat, black and gold sandals while a delicate thread of silver links circled an ankle. Mrs. Taylor, in a gray polka-dotted wash dress with tiny red bead earrings and necklace, looked very young, sat silent,

Later Mrs. Gimbel, Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Taylor, in that order, stood in the receiving line. The women queued up slowly, old ladies, elaborately dressed women, youngsters, three Bellevue-Stratford chambermaids, a great many Negroes, all without exception well-dressed. In the hall guests signed a register, bought navy blue cotton bandannas, chain stitched with the nominees' names, tied on diamond shaped tags announcing they were Wallace Women. Orange punch was served and a delegate passed a box of assorted sweet crackers. In spite of the hum of conversation, despite Mrs. Wallace's cheerful effort, the occasion was pathetically overtoned. A great many women, with uncertain aim, doing their best to seem busily important. Upstairs at the Wallace press conference, some sardonic soul murmured confusedly, "at least clarity has emerged into fog." Downstairs it was precisely the same.

Fashion Settles Down; Fall Wardrobe Changes Not Drastic

you can allow yourself the luxury of indulging in a bit of high-fashion. Try one with a high neckline and tiny, rounded collar and skirt that is slim in front but sweeps to gored fullness in back. If your coat is beige, taupe or gray, you may make this a black frock if you so desire. Wear it with bronze kid shoes which will go equally well with your brown outfits.

As for accessories for this autumn and winter wardrobe, we suggest a brown velvet or satin turban; brown suede pumps with French Louis heel; brown fabric handbag and white or chamois-colored gloves; some brilliant-hued chiffon scarfs which you can knot high around the throat, giving the effect of an old-fashioned high-necked jabot.

For excitement and supplementary costumes we suggest: A splash of red somewhere, either in an extra gabardine dress, jacket, blouse or scarf; a plaid coat for office and street wear; shoes and bag of forest green suede; a set of gold-toned accessories.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Widower, 60, Asks Evaluation of His Idea Of Marrying Widow, 50, on Condition That They Sign Waiver of Each Other's Property

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a widower, 60 years old. My wife passed away seven years ago. I helped to rear two children of hers by a previous marriage, and we also reared two children of our own.

When my wife fell ill and realized she wouldn't get well, she often expressed concern at the possibility that I might marry again, and that the property she had helped me accumulate might pass to another woman, leaving her children nothing.

This has bothered me a bit, for I always respected her thinking; and more recently I have been considering marrying a widow, 50 who has two children. In exploring the feasibility of getting married, we have been tentatively discussing finances.

I own my home and have a little money saved, and Martha has a home valued at approximately $12,000, and receives a widow's pension of $30 per month from the Government. If we marry, she probably would convert her home into cash, and I would make her the beneficiary of a $5000 insurance policy to replace the pension.

Would Deed Her Some Insurance

I AM employed, have exceptionally good health, and expect to be able to earn a good income for at least five more years; and at 65, I shall have a life income of $100 a month to tide us through, if my earning capacity should cease or dwindle.

Martha has said that she must bequeath her property to her children in the event of her death, to insure their education; and I subscribe wholeheartedly to this idea, as I feel, in turn, that my estate should pass to my children in the event of my death.

Would it be a fair proposition to ask or expect her to marry me, with the understanding that we draw up a prenuptial agreement stipulating that Martha's property remains hers and mine remains mine? I would appreciate your views of the matter. E. E.

Are His Motives Openly Revealed?

DEAR E. E.: The dicker you have in mind would be "fair" only if the motives which prompt it were truly altruistic, i. e., if you were honestly concerned to deal equitably with rightful claimants to a share in your property. And I'm not sure that's the ticket with you.

It seems likely that your children and stepchildren are fully grown, probably in their thirties at least, no longer nestlings with beaks open for provender from papa. Which puts them in a different category from Martha's, who are still in school, I gather.

There is unselfish logic in her feeling that she should bequeath her small estate to them in the event she dies BEFORE they complete their education; and I have a notion that you cordially endorse this responsible viewpoint of hers, mostly as plausible pretext for trading her out of a helpmeet's proper share in your estate, in the event you marry her and precede her in death.

Why would you want to do that? Because you feel too old for new love, I suppose, hence tend to prize money and your own flesh-and-blood above any new relationship you might contract for self serving reasons hereinafter.

What of Dividends Jointly Fertilized?

IF YOU clinched this prenuptial agreement, stipulating that your property remains yours and Martha's hers, after marriage, just how would you keep subsequent dividends, jointly accumulated, sorted out?

You may argue that if Martha didn't invest independent income in the marriage, then she wouldn't be materially enriching your estate in tangible ways. But if she were an excellent housewife whose skill and devotion made you the beneficiary of endless economies and invigorating comforts that prolonged your earnings capacity and let annuity income fatten at interest, naturally your estate would profit substantially. Does she get no credit for that? Or is the small insurance supposed to cover everything?

Frankly, I don't favor the hoss-trading approach to marriage; but put your proposition to Martha and get her reactions. She might think you're a grand catch to live with.

M. H.

Travelogue Talk To Be Given at Women's City Club

Mrs. Gertrude Parks, former president of the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs, will present a travelogue based on a recent European trip when the Women's City Club holds a special benefit program, July 28, in the clubhouse.

Mrs. Parks and Mrs. Luther Lemon, a well known District club leader, sailed for Genoa on the S. S. Vulcania in the middle of March and returned to New York on the Queen Mary. The two visited some 10 countries. Mrs. Lemon went especially to visit her daughter, Mrs. Robert Coluter, the former Mary Turley Lemon, who was then working in Nuernberg as secretary to Josiah Du Bois, deputy chief counsel of war crimes.

In addition to the talk by Mrs. Parks and the musicale, there will be a refreshment hour under the direction of Mrs. Sylvia Wentworth.

Children Can Make a Crystal Garden

Coarse-grain salt, a little coloring matter, a bit of stone, a shallow bowl and some water are all that are needed to make an attractive table decoration. Children and parents alike will enjoy the simple experiment that results in the crystal garden.

Here are the steps: First dye some of the salt with mercurochrome or red ink and other batches with blue and green ink. Then, get a shallow bowl and place a clinker from the furnace or a small piece of rough stone in the center of the bowl. Next sprinkle the vari-colored salt on and around the clinker or stone. Finally, dampen the salt with water, applying the water gradually. As the salt dissolves, tiny flowerlike crystals will form.

About Remodeling Closet

The only closet in our apartment is a dressing room through which one must pass to enter the bathroom. The dressing room is large enough to permit me to put a partition at one end to protect clothing from the dampness of the bathroom and from dust. I have consulted several handymen about this, but they were reluctant to undertake it, having had no experience at that sort of work. How could I find someone capable of putting up a simple partition and fitting a door to it? Is it possible to find such units ready-made to fit into place? F. G.

Look under "Carpenters" in the yellow pages of the telephone book for a cabinet maker or man specializing in remodeling. The door, if it is to be a standard size, can be purchased ready made, but the frame for it is not available ready-made. This would seem to be a fairly simple job for anyone who does remodeling. Or, if you find the construction of a partition too costly, possibly an attractive folding screen would give enough protection for your clothes.

Is there anything which will remove purple crayon markings from plastic leather? The leather is a cream color. We have tried soap and water, carbon tetrachloride, kitchen cleanser and even bleach to no avail. The fabric is used on a newly covered stroller and we hope there is some solvent which may remove, bleach, or at least lessen the marks as they ruin an otherwise very attractive piece. M. F. T.

I'm afraid I can't hold out much hope for removing this stain since it's still there after all the things you have tried. You might try sponging it with a liquid made up of one cup denatured alcohol and two cups water. Sometimes this will remove the remaining color. Also, sometimes liquid paint cleaners will remove crayon marks from such surfaces.

I have recently acquired a pattern for making felt booties and adult slipper "boots." As these are winter articles for indoor use I would like to know where I could purchase felt that would be heavy enough for this type of slipper. I have two small babies and my husband works six days a week, 12 hours a day. Therefore, my shopping periods are extremely rare. I would also like to know if this material could be ordered by phone. B. E. McD.

There is a tailor's trimming shop on G st. which sells felt. It does not have a delivery service, but will mail the felt to you C.O.D. Or, after you place your order by phone, you can mail the firm a check. It can be reached by calling DIstrict 6439.

What is the best way to get rid of ants—black and tiny red? T. L. B.

The only way to rid your house permanently of ants is to watch them for a while to see where they carry the food after obtaining it. When their run has been determined, place an insect powder or repellent in the path. In this way, the workers will possibly carry the poison back to the nest and in time the queen will be destroyed. One effective repellent comes in syrup form and is available at drug and hardware stores. A drop or so of this is placed on a piece of cardboard at night in the path of the ants and therefore can be easily removed in the morning before a child or pet gets into it. Should you find that the ants disappear into a crack in the woodwork or under the floor, squirting some liquid insecticide into the crack with an oil can will help to destroy the nest.

Please give me some suggestions as to the necessary clothing for traveling by train from Washington to San Francisco, for myself and 8-year-old son; also from San Francisco to Manila by boat, having in mind very limited finances and the fact that we shall be there for 2 or 3 years and that I will be employed in a secretarial capacity. Most of the clothing that I may have to purchase, I should like to be able to use later on. We plan to leave here about September 1. G. S. F.

For yourself to wear on the train, a print rayon or rayon jersey dress with dark harmonizing accessories and a jacket or light shore coat would be ideal. Your son would be comfortable and attractive in gabardine or light weight slacks with white or colored sport style shirts. For dressing up on the train and cool evenings it would be a good idea for him to have a sport type suit jacket which would harmonize or contrast well with his slacks. If he is reasonably careful, a fresh shirt each day on the train should keep him neat.

On board ship, fall clothes will be worn. For you, a suit, which you can either dress up or down by the blouse you wear with it, would probably be appropriate. In addition, it would be wise to have several cotton dresses. Whether or not you will need an evening dress on shipboard will depend upon the boat on which you travel. The clothes your son wears on the train will serve nicely on board ship with the possible addition of short trousers and gay knitted slip-over cotton shirts for deck activities.

A representative at the Philippine Embassy tells me that the weather there is mild. Most of the year it is warm without our humidity. During their winters, you would wear the sort of clothes we wear here in the fall. The rest of the time, a summer wardrobe is in order. She also specified that in the cities people dress in evening clothes much more generally than here, and urged you to include an evening dress and a cocktail dress.

TANTALIZING treat for Sunday—or any other morning breakfast—is spicy apple muffins, made with fresh apples and flavored with cinnamon and nutmeg. Here's the recipe for them:

SPICY APPLE MUFFINS

2 cups flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
¾ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
½ cup margarine
¼ cup sugar
1 egg
¾ to 1 cup milk
¾ cup chopped apple
¼ apple cut in wedges
cinnamon-sugar mixture

Set the oven control at 400 degrees Fahrenheit and start to heating. Sift flour. Measure. Add baking powder, salt, cinnamon and nutmeg. Sift again. Cream the margarine. Add sugar gradually and continue beating until light and fluffy. Add egg and beat well. Stir in milk and chopped apples. All flour mixture and stir just enough to dampen dry ingredients. Do not beat. (The batter will look lumpy but that's the way it should look if you want good texture.)

Drop by spoonfuls into margarined muffin pans, filling the pans about 2-3 full. Remove batter each time from the top. (If you dip to the bottom the extra stirring will cause poor texture.)

Prepare the ¼ apple in small wedges. Make a cinnamon-sugar mixture by using ¼ cup sugar and 1 teaspoon cinnamon. Dip apple wedge in the mixture. Place one on top each muffin and sprinkle with cinnamon-sugar mixture. Place in preheated oven and bake 20 to 25 minutes. Remove muffins from pans as soon as they come from the oven. This recipe makes 12 to 15 average-sized muffins.

Cooking Cues

A touch of paprika added to a cheese sauce gives it good color and flavor. Use such a cheese sauce to top ham broiled with bananas, cooked vegetables, or over broiled fish.

Leftover meat from a veal roast may be used to stuff green peppers; add them to a cream sauce and season with salt and pepper and grated onion, top with buttered crumbs. Leftover rice may also be added to the stuffing if desired.

Chicken may be rolled in egg and crumbs, arranged in a baking dish and baked in the oven for about an hour, or until done. A fryer or broiler should be chosen for chicken to be prepared in this way and it should be basted frequently, during the baking, with margarine or butter.

Make lamb chops go farther by stuffing them with a savory meat dressing. Then bake them in the oven.

Creamed green cabbage is an excellent vegetable to serve with roast chicken and savory dressing.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JULY 25, 1948

Lustron Names Dealer; 300 Units Per Year Allocated to D. C. Area

CARL G. STRANDLUND, president, Lustron Corp., announced yesterday the appointment of Carlton Construction Corp. as dealer-erectors for Lustron houses in the Washington metropolitan area.

The area to be served by Carlton Construction includes the District, Fairfax and Arlington Counties and the City of Alexandria, Va., and Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties in Maryland.

Headquarters for Carlton Construction will be in the District of Columbia at a location to be announced on Wednesday. In the meantime, it was stated, inquiries should be addressed to the Lustron exhibit house located on Riverside dr., New Hampshire ave. and E st. nw.

Carlton Construction Corp., a newly formed firm, is composed entirely of local residents, is headed by Charles E. V. Prins, with the erection work under the supervision of A. C. (Pete) Shire, vice president in charge of construction. After many years in industrial and residential construction work in the East, Shire was appointed chief engineer of the Federal Housing Administration and later director of the technical division of USHA.

The construction supervisor will be assisted, as general superintendent, by John Ross, who was engaged in large-scale residential construction in the New York City area for many years and later served as engineer with Government housing agencies and with the Foreign Economic Commission.

Prins has been associated with the Lustron house program almost since its inception. He said his firm would be allotted 300 houses per year to the Washington area. "I hope the people understand this and will be patient until such time as production catches up to demand," Mr. Strandlund added.

More than 50,000 people have visited the Lustron Exhibit House and 1500 prospective purchasers have put their names on a list to buy this newest example of modern housing. Prins, serving as spokesman for Carlton, said that orders will not be taken for several weeks, but that application blanks will be mailed within the next few days to all those who have or will request them. He also pointed out that there is no advance list of orders and that all families interested in purchasing the Lustron house would have equal opportunities to do so.

The house, now on exhibit, will sell for approximately $8000, exclusive of land. This price includes erection and many built-in features. Production at the huge Lustron plant at Columbus, Ohio, is expected to start within the next week or 10 days. Some houses will be available in Washington in late August or early September, with shipments advancing to a rate of about 300 a year.

The Lustron house is generally credited with being the forerunner of the new machine-made age in housing. Constructed of porcelain-enameled steel, the 31 by 35 feet ranch-type house offers features seldom found in homes costing $3000 to $5000 more.

Built-in features include a china cabinet in the dining alcove, mirrored bookcase in the living room and an 8-foot vanity in the master bedroom.

At Little Cost

Decorations In Inn Offer Home Ideas

"A WELL-DECORATED house never suggests the hand of the decorator," says Genevieve Hendricks, 1747 K st. nw., a member of the American Institute of Decorators.

Miss Hendricks holds that a home should reflect the individuality of its owners, not that of the decorator. And, she adds, clubs and offices should express a theme in harmony with their purposes.

Water Gate Inn, a quaint restaurant at F st. and Rock Creek Parkway nw., has just felt the Handricks touch. Decorator Hendricks is a sister to Miss Marjory Hendricks, the inn's proprietor. The renovation offers many suggestions to home makers on the lookout for good ideas.

Indoor shutters painted in homely and amusing Dutch designs, a Water Gate trade-mark, make window drapes unnecessary. Gayety and a lack of fussiness are thus achieved at once. Treatment of small windows, of which there are several since the inn was once a stable, could be a fountain of ideas for anyone planning to fix up a basement rumpus room.

A painted pattern that extends toward the ceiling makes the small window something more than just a dust collector. Another quaint treatment is the use of crosshatching of white ename. on windows to form a casement effect.

This same crosshatch effect is also effective on large sterile expanses of mirror. Even the windows of the inn's telephone booth are crosshatched! If a change is desired the enamel can be easily removed with a safety-razor blade.

Wall That's Different

GARDEN LOVERS who can find some old window shutters may want to copy the Water Gate outdoor terrace. A wall of white window shutters incloses the terrace. Bright green vines are trained over the wall for an attractive backdrop.

Interior walls of the inn are white. The apparent length of the long room is further extended by an end wall of blue-green that

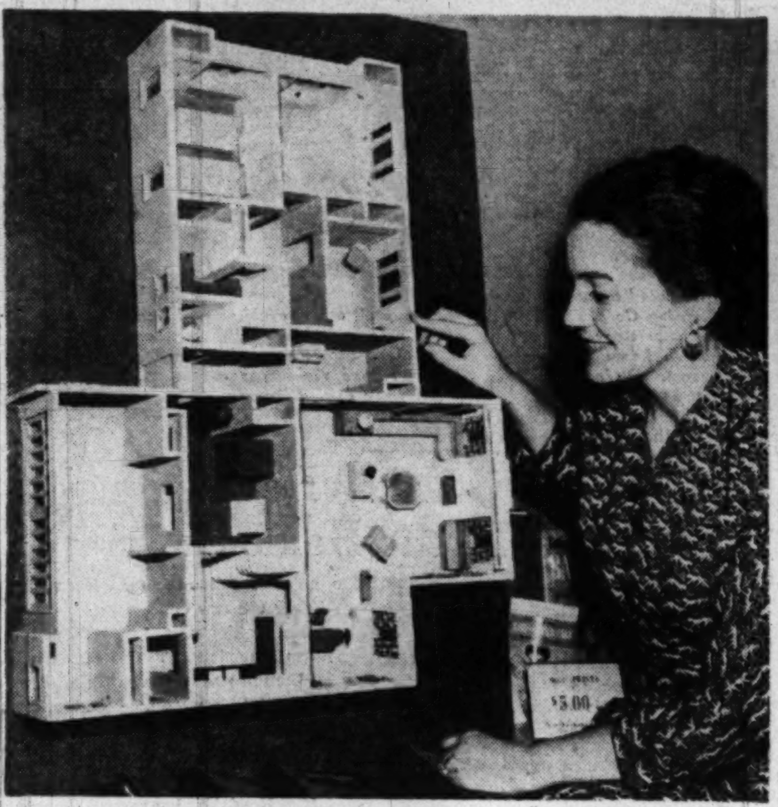
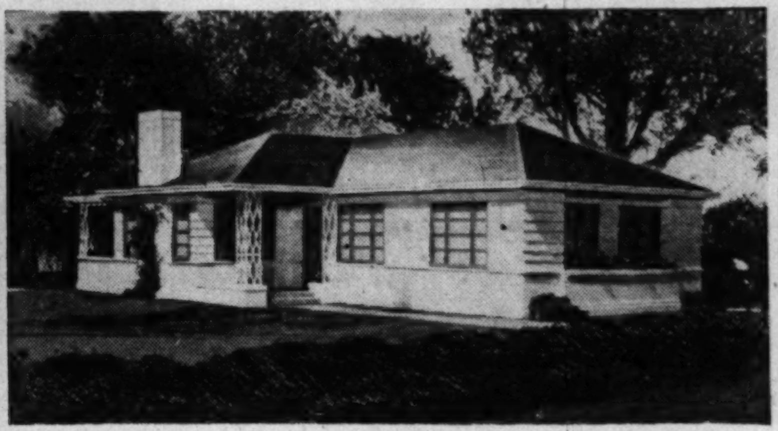
A Star Attraction in "Homes of '48" Exhibition

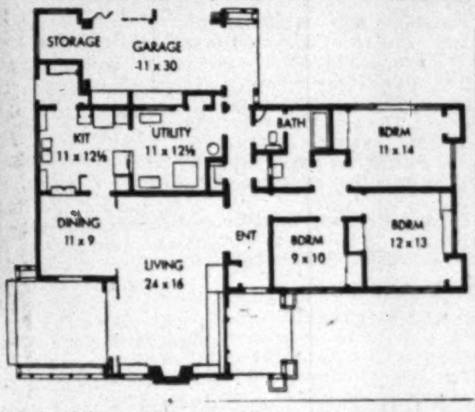
Too Many Cooks Didn't Spoil This Architectural Pie!



Mary Donoho, 4308 3d st. se., looks over a scale model of The Hecht Co.-Sidney Weinberg & Sons entry in the "Homes of '48" exhibition. Scale models of both the interior and exterior are on display in the Home Planning Center at The Hecht Co.



Here's how the modern ranch style rambler will look when completed by Sidney Weinberg & Sons, builders. It is located at 928 Ridge rd., Columbia Pines, near Annandale, Va., and will be opened to the public on September 12



By Conrad P. Harness

A NATIONAL magazine has joined hands with a local store and home builder in planning one of the feature attractions of the forthcoming "Homes of '48" exhibition.

Better Homes and Gardens, in cooperation with Sidney Weinberg & Sons and the Hecht Co., has furnished plans for a home now under construction in Columbia Pines, off Columbia Pike extended, in nearby Fairfax County.

The dwelling is one of 10 brand new homes which will go on public exhibition for four weeks beginning September 12. Ten home builders, 10 furniture stores and The Washington Post are sponsoring the event which will be free to the public.

As announced in previous stories concerning the unique affair, the 10 homes are located in all sections of the metropolitan area, priced from $15,000 to $45,000. Printed copies of a map and route list will be furnished by The Washington Post. Homes will not be opened previously to the September 12 deadline date.

It was learned yesterday that the State Department, through its Office of International Information-International Press, will tell other nations of the many advances in home building techniques discovered by American builders.

OII cameramen will capture on film the story of the 10 homes under construction in the "Homes of '48" exhibit. The story and pictures will be distributed to publications in 25 to 30 foreign countries, especially those which suffered great loss of housing through war action.

The Columbia Pines home is a modern seven-room ranch type rambler, with no basement, a utility room, and a built-in garage. A large irregular shaped lot 137 by 175 feet, on gently rolling ground, sets the home off from its neighbors.

Much thought and experimentation went into the planning of the dream home. The floor plan is definitely something out of the ordinary seen in this area. The three bedrooms and bath are in a separate wing of the home, undisturbed by activities in the work and living quarters of the dwelling.

The bathroom is a story in itself: its three separate compartments allow its use by more than one person at a time. One section has the water closet and sink, another the bath, and the third compartment is a small dressing area. Bathroom walls are finished in gleaming Carrara glass and the entire area is soundproofed.

The exterior of the home will be of vertical beveled siding, set above a stucco base. Latticework and build-in flower boxes add to its charm.

The 11-by-30-foot garage is adjacent to the utility room with a direct entrance into the home. The garage door is four paneled and operates by finger-tip control.

All woodwork, including closets, bookcases, kitchen cabinets and door frames are made on the premises of Columbia Pines.

The home will be decorated and furnished by the Hecht Co.'s staff of interior decorators headed by Jay Owens. Mr. Owens and his staff are working with Miss Christine Holbrook, director of Homes Furnishings Department, Better Homes and Gardens. All furniture, drapes and other appointments will be from stocks available for sale at the Hecht Co. All have been selected and keyed with emphasis for the latest style trends suitable for the Washington area.

Public to Inspect 35 New Homes Here Sept. 4 to 11

Thirty-five new homes will be opened to the public by local builders during National Home Week, September 4 to 11, one of a score of celebrations planned for principal cities throughout the United States.

The "Week" is expected to acquaint the public with construction advances made in the building industry. It is sponsored nationally by the National Association of Home Builders and locally by the Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Washington.

Homes to be on public display here will be in all price ranges, styles and locations. The event locally will be followed by The Washington Post's "Homes of '48," set for four weeks beginning September 12, and the Home Show-Exposition, October 16-24 at the National Guard Armory.

Brick, Tile Output Up

Production of brick and structural clay tile for the first six months of 1948 is running ahead of the record postwar production in 1947, the Structural Clay Products Institute has reported.

"More than 2½ billion brick have been produced in the first six months of 1948, an 11 per cent increase over the first six months of 1947. Structural clay tile production, after a slow start due to unfavorable weather conditions, has now reached 622,000 tons, only 3 per cent behind last year's figure.

"The June, 1948, brick output was 510 million brick, an increase of 23 per cent over the same month last year and only a slight seasonal decline from the record postwar production of May, 1948."

29 'Twin Brook' Homes

A permit application to build 29 more homes in its proposed 600 home "Twin Brook" project, on Viers Mill rd., near Rockville, Md., has been filed by Twin Brook, Inc. Dwellings will be one-story frame structures, measuring 41 by 23 feet.

81% of Cities Lack Space For Business

A shortage of business space exists in 81 per cent of the cities, the National Association of Real Estate Boards reported yesterday on the basis of a survey of 208 cities.

With business at a high level and construction costs rising, the shortage of commercial property has pushed up its selling price as compared with a year ago in 41 per cent of the reporting cities, NAREB said, with prices about the same in 54 per cent of the communities.

Rents, uncontrolled, show an even more general rise. For downtown retail space, they are higher than they were a year ago in 58 per cent of the reporting cities. They remain unchanged in 40 per cent of the cities, and are down in only two per cent.

Most active group of cities at present in business and industrial expansion appears from the survey to be those between 100,000 and 500,000 population. A larger-than-average percentage of these cities have the following signs of business ferment:

1. Higher prices than a year ago for modern industrial property.
2. Higher rentals for retail business space both downtown and in outlying sections.
3. Higher selling prices and larger volume of sales for commercial property.

Electricity Ups Farm Net Profit

By George Tucker

NEW YORK, July 24 (AP).—Extension of electricity to rural communities is giving farmers their highest living standard in history.

By doing work cheaper than hired hands could do it, and by increasing output, electricity is providing more profit.

And farmers can buy more feed grinders, pressure water systems, cream separators, milk coolers, storage freezing units, milking machines and other sweat-saving equipment.

Buttressed by high prices and by some Federally guaranteed crop prices, current statistics disclose the farmers have scored these gains since 1940: Savings have quadrupled and the national farm mortgage debt has dropped 20 percent.

Electricity does as much work for 18 cents as a hired man does in one hour for 64 cents.

A pressure water system on one Midwest farm saved 35 man-hours a month. The cost of electricity to operate the system was nominal to the amount the owner formerly paid to have the water hauled by hand.

Other farms report similar experiences. The National Association of Electrical Manufacturers says:

"For less than 5 cents, electricity will shell from 20 to 30 bushels of corn, milk 10 to 20 cows, pump 1000 gallons of water, mix two tons of feed, churn 100 pounds of butter or elevate 500 bushels of grain."

One Iowa farmer exults: We have 722 acres and only three workers. We are raising 700 pigs, have 225 acres in corn and 325 acres in wheat. Electricity does the work."

The farmer, riding a wave of high prices, shows this differential since the beginning of his prosperity eight years ago.

Prices Way Up

In 1940 he got an average price of 74 cents a bushel for hard winter wheat. The average price in 1947 was $2.24. In 1940 the average price for hay was $14.80 a ton. last year it was $27.40.

Electric power is swiftly spreading to farms in all sections of the United States. At least four million of America's six million farms are now electrified, the Farm Electrification Bureau of National Electrical Manufacturers Association says. New farms are being added to the power lines at the rate of about half a million a year, the bureau adds.

Electrification is heaviest in the New England, Pacific and Middle Atlantic States, the Edison Electrical Institute says. In these regions more than 90 per cent of the farms are equipped with electrical power.

The South Central States, which include Alabama, Kentucky, Tennessee and Mississippi, lists the lowest percentage—44.4, according to the institute.

The bottleneck in higher farm living standards continues to be plumbing. Though farms with private baths and flush toilets have doubled since 1940, four out of every five are still without both, a fact-finding organization has ascertained.

Water Gate Inn Decorations Offer Tips to Home Owners carries the eye into a deceptive perspective.

This illustrates another Hendricks axiom—it is more interesting to use contrasting colored walls to accent the unusual proportions of a room than to try to reduce it to the more usual and humdrum size.

The apparently white walls of Water Gate are not true white, Miss Hendricks pointed out. Into the white paint she mixed small amounts of blue-green, red and old pine, the colors figuring in the inn's decorative scheme. Her rule: Never use raw color.

Shellacking pine is a sacrilege to Miss Hendricks. The mellow pine at the inn was treated with hot linseed oil, then waxed. Occasionally it is cleaned with varsol and steel wool, then rewaxed.

To home makers and builders, Miss Hendricks has several words of advice. First essential for a house is that it be planned for order and cleanliness, against a basic background which includes a well-located neighborhood.

Never waste a view. Make the most of a lovely outlook by framing it with a picture window.

Doctors and psychiatrists have recognized that harmonious surroundings are important to health, Miss Hendricks points out. Home owners can help keep themselves well by following this principle.

It can be applied endlessly—a kitchen planned for step-saving, a pleasant dining room that induces good digestion, or the aquamarine boudoir that brings out the coloring of a redheaded girl and boosts her morale. All are better aids to better living!

Owners Now Occupy 54.7% Of U. S. Homes

The proportion of American families owning their own homes has risen sharply since 1940, according to the 1948 Britannica Book of the Year.

In 1947, 54.7 per cent of the dwelling units were occupied by their owners and only 45.3 per cent by tenants. By contrast, 1940 figures show that in that year only 43.6 per cent were owner-occupied and 56.4 per cent were tenant-occupied.

"This change resulted because it was impossible to find a house offered for rent," Britannica explains. "Many families bought as the only means of obtaining a place to live."

The severity of the housing shortage was also reflected in the number of vacant housing units available for sale or rent. In 1947, 439,000 vacant units were offered for sale or rent—only 1 per cent of the total number of dwelling units, compared with nearly 4 per cent in 1940, the book reports. The situation was somewhat less acute in rural-farm areas, where vacancies ran 2.3 per cent.

By April, 1947, half of the renters in the United States were paying more than $31.64 a month for their homes, compared with $24.60 in April, 1940.

75% Street Lights Obsolete

Lighting authorities warn that 75 per cent of the Nation's 400,000 street lights are obsolete. They estimate that these antiquated lights cost 10,000 lives and 500 million dollars in property damage annually from traffic accidents due to inadequate visibility.

Truman Seeks TVA Funds

President Truman will ask Congress next week to provide funds for the new Johnsonville, Tenn., steam plant proposed by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The White House announced that a request for appropriation of funds for the steam plant will be made as part of an over-all request for about 56 million dollars—rejected by Congress as its regular session.

The request will cover 11 projects of the Army Engineers, nine of the Bureau of Reclamation transmission lines and substations for the Southwestern Power Administration, and the TVA steam plant.

Realty Roundup

MORE FUEL ON THE MORTGAGE FIRE: Look magazine has discovered that "building loans for people in the $7500 class are hard, if not impossible, to get today." The quote was prompted by sales results of the prefab which the magazine sponsored in several cities over the Nation. Priced to sell at $7500, it found few takers because of the mortgage squeeze.

Look said more than a million home buyers turned out to inspect the various models, but builders from Maine to Montana sent in the same story, "customers like my house very much . . . want one immediately but haven't ready cash . . . can't get loans . . . and I can't finance them."

The majority of people of this price range cannot raise the necessary down payment for construction loans; many haven't even land-purchase money, and distributors cannot be asked to assume these burdens, continues Look.

Some distributors, continued Look, who dived into low-cost house projects originally with tremendous enthusiasm withdrew when they became fully aware of point-of-sale financing obstacles, particularly the interim construction period that occurs between the placing of the order and the point of completion of the house when mortgage financing becomes a possibility.

Either industry and finance must find a way to build houses so low in cost that millions can afford to make the required down payment, concludes Look, or broad Government help may be the only way out.

J. WESLEY BUCHANAN, Washington realtor and builder, has verbally spanked The Washington Post for an article in last Sunday's real estate section concerning mortgages. The article dealt with the fact that the tight mortgage situation had ended the honeymoon between home buyers and mortgage bankers, with resulting bigger cash down payments, higher interests and monthly payments, plus shorter amortization periods.

Buchanan points out that prewar financing was wonderful in comparison with today's problem.

"Most mortgage bankers have recently taken the arbitrary position that they will not make loans on new homes for more than 15 years and in some instances only 12 years. Also, most mortgage bankers are now making loans for less than two-thirds of the selling or market price. So now the customary loan is not the same as prewar," he declared.

"This obviously is resulting in unnecessary hardship on many prospective purchasers who have substantial cash to pay down but who cannot raise the extra cash or carry the increased monthly payments. In referring to mortgage bankers, I am including banks, insurance companies and savings and loan institutions, and regarding houses I am referring to new houses that are well built, well planned and well located."

Engineers Advised They Must Be Tax Experts

CHICAGO, July 24 (AP).—Engineers should become experts in property assessment, according to William L. Chilcote, deputy highways engineer in the Department of Public Works, Baltimore, Md. A "firm over-all policy" should be established on special assessment limitations for highway and street improvements, he added.

In an address prepared for the municipal division of the American Road Builders forty-fifth annual convention, Chilcote said:

"With the ever-increasing truck and heavy arterial traffic, the construction of major capital improvements should be financed for the greatest part with funds accrued through gasoline and road-tax use.

"The abutting property owners should, however, be assessed, through special property assessments, for the special benefits derived from the improvement. This is usually accomplished through a special paving tax assessment.

"On the other hand, for a residential street where the individual benefit is greatest, a special paving tax or special assessment should be imposed.

"They should not be allowed to reach a proportion that would mean confiscation of the properties involved. For alley and footway improvements, this work should not be done at the expense of the municipality.

"Although our paramount interest as engineers," Chilcote said, "is planning, design and construction of roads and bridges, we must, however, by necessity concern ourselves with the financial and legal phases of the project."

Bull Sees Reflection Smashes New Auto

Charles Town, W. Va., July 24 (AP).—Farmer Eben Trussell considered himself lucky when he received delivery on his new 1949 model car—until he drove it home, that is. He parked the automobile in the barn lot. There a bull calf saw his reflection in the windshield, took a running leap, crashed through the glass and bounced back on the hood.

The car's windshield was shattered. The calf was worse off, requiring a veterinarian's service to stitch him together.

Varied Levels of Work Counters Suggested

Nothing in Kitchen Is Right Height, it Seems

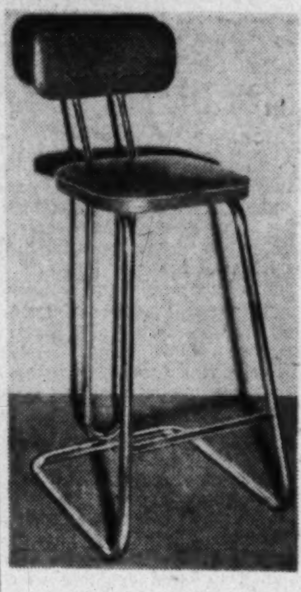
By Harriet Morrison

NEW YORK, July 24.—Ever since the pantry moved into the kitchen proper and the refrigerator came in from the back porch, we have chortled gleefully about our step-saving kitchens. True, we cut hours off our traveling time by shortening the distances in the work center of the kitchen. But since the arrival of the step-saving kitchen, great numbers of women have been looking for a comfortable place to beat an egg, mix a cake, roll out pastry or chop onions.

Their work space is a continuous counter connecting the range, sink and refrigerator. This is easy to clean and lovely to look at. But it is never big enough, it tires the arms and one's knees bump. How often have we longed to pull out a section of it and make ourselves comfortable!

The fact is that height is one trouble. The standard 36-inch height work space requires a lot of reaching, raising of arms and bending.

There are two ways of varying heights. Either raise and lower the work surface or raise and lower the chair or stool. If you prefer to stand, the only choice is to have more than one work surface level.



Comfortable and compact

Know Your Needs

THE VARIETY of heights you have, of course, depends on what you do in the kitchen. If you do a great deal of mixing, you should know that a 32-inch level is found to be the most satisfactory for most women.

For those who do very little mixing it may not be necessary to have a whole counter or table 32 inches high. A pull-out board may be the answer. The way to tell the right height for you is to take hold of an egg beater and stand with arms flexed and palms extended. For a mixing center it is the distance from the floor to the bottom of the egg beater that is comfortable, say the experts.

Free-standing kitchen storage units in varied heights and with porcelain tops and shelves or drawers underneath can be found in most department stores. Measure heights before you buy.

Extension Table

A STANDARD base cabinet unit called Sterling Glydeaway has an extension table that rolls out from the cabinet to a maximum length of 42 inches. The cabinet itself is 36 inches high and the extension table is 29 inches from the floor.

For those who sit down to work—mixing, cutting, chopping—a table is often more comfortable than a cabinet type surface because it provides knee room. Cosco's folding table (30 inches high) has metal legs and a smooth baked enamel top. It comes in colors.

More than one-level stools and chairs also are available. Stools come with and without back support. They are made in heights suitable for breakfast bars, for ironing, for sit-down kitchen tasks and for children who have outgrown high chairs.

The kitchen bar type of stool is by Troy. Cosco makes a stool with a footrest and backrest, as well as a combination stepladder and stool.

The high stool shown here is by Daystrom. It is covered in a washable colored plastic. The seat is 12 inches square and there is a foot and back support. A chair with arms, also by Daystrom, comes in a choice of colors. These make good kitchen dining chairs or planning-desk chairs. A low stool is the choice of some as a resting spot for a portable washing machine.

Adjustable Stools

ANOTHER possibility in the stool family is the one that goes up and down. Adjusting the chair rather than the work surface may be the solution in some kitchens.

The point is to note your own working habits, find out what jobs you sit down to do and what ones you stand up to do, test your work surface for comfortable height and figure how you could adjust that height.

Chicago Plans Housing Project Of $18,000,000

Chicago, July 24 (AP).—An 18-million-dollar project is being planned for building 1800 rental apartments in a 10-block slum area on Chicago's South Side.

City and State funds will be used to acquire and clear the blighted area between 31st and 33d sts. and the Lake Front and South Park ave. One of the Nation's largest insurance companies is considering construction of the apartments after buying the land.

Gov. Dwight H. Green and the Illinois State Housing Board, in announcing the project, said construction by the private interests is "in immediate prospect." He did not name the insurance company.

Lumber Mill Planned

A one-story cinder block lumber bill on River rd., Bladensburg, Md., is planned by S. F. T. Investment Co. The owner will be the builder. A building permit has been issued.

Soviets Study Vitamin Plants

Moscow, July 24 (AP).—Near Moscow there is a plantation for vitamin producing plants.

This scientific institution studies various plants which develop high vitamin content and can possibly be used by the Soviet vitamin industry.

For instance, many fields there are devoted to gladioli, which are a potential raw material for the industry, 14 hectares of blackberry bushes and 60 different varieties of wild rose.

Evening Moscow described this plantation as "the only one of its type."

Engine Loses to Tank

Sydney, Australia (AP).—A railway engine came off second best in a collision with a 14-ton General Lee tank at Yass, New South Wales. Approaching a crossing, the driver of the tank did not hear the locomotive's whistle. The locomotive hit the tank broadside. The tank was undamaged, but the locomotive got a buckled bumper and a crushed steam pipe. There were no casualties.

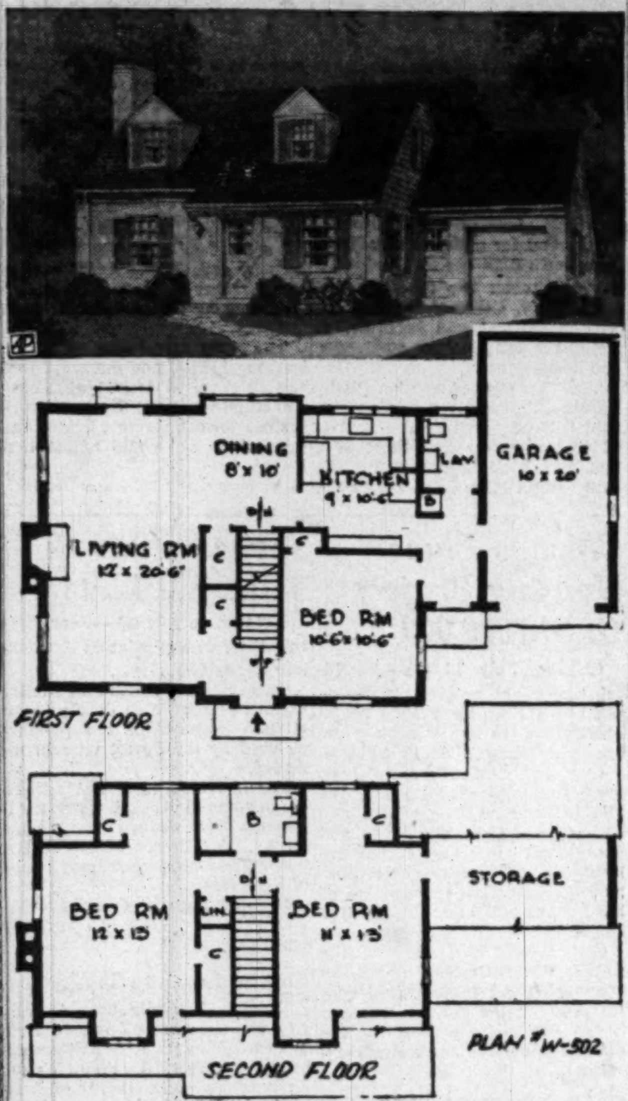
It Passed 'Budget' Test



This compact six-room house can be built as a "honeymoon cottage" with the second floor left to be finished when the family grows. By including a shower stall in the lavatory the ground floor will comprise a complete four-room dwelling. Designed by Bertram A. Weber, architect, 221 N LaSalle st., Chicago, Ill., this plan, W-502, covers an area of about 905 square feet with garage. Including a full basement, the house contains approximately 18,000 cubic feet. The architect suggests a red brick exterior accented with white trim and green shutters. The first floor bedroom can double as a library

Now You Can Magnetize Screw, Hold Temper

Remember the last time you lost your temper and a lot of time trying to place a screw in that awkward, blinkety-blank spot? It needn't occur again. Now there's a small magnetizing unit for the home. Not only screwdrivers but hammers and all the small tools can be magnetized to simplify repair work or small building jobs. It also is designed to serve the "little woman." She can, for instance, magnetize her scissors to pick up pins. The unit plugs into any home electrical outlet—and it also demagnetizes.

Logging Town of 1000 Unveils New $100,000 War Memorial

By Ann Reed Burns

DRAIN, Oreg., July 24 (AP).—The memorial that "couldn't be built" will be dedicated in this tiny logging community of 1000 inhabitants.

This village, so small that everyone thought it would be lucky to eke out even a statue, has built a war memorial that cost more than $100,000. Every cent is paid.

Without taxation, without borrowing, without any public funds, Drain and other small communities nearby have built one of the finest recreational centers in southwestern Oregon.

The materials alone cost $100,000. The cost of the completed project would have been far more if it hadn't been for hundreds of hours of donated labor.

The "North Douglas County Living War Memorial" comprises a concrete tennis court, baseball diamond with floodlighting, and a $75,000 swimming pool and bathhouse.

That's a pretty ambitious project for a village of 1000.

"But we decided we had to build the best," explained James Whipple, president of the War Memorial Committee. "It would be an insult to our dead, and to our community, to build anything which wasn't the best possible."

The people of North Douglas County, who didn't realize it was impossible, began saving money. The nucleus of their fund came from the wartime scrap metal and paper drives.

The biggest money-maker was "Donation Work Day." All the lumber produced that day furnished funds for the project. Mills donated their logs and equipment; workmen donated their time. In the end, the fund was big enough not only to build the project, but to keep it going, too.

A homeowner applies Paracrete paint on his basement floor

THE makers of Paracrete, a new type paint perfected and manufactured in Washington, claim that it will do about everything except hold a house together. Although designed specifically for use on concrete floors, the versatile paint has found wide usage in several fields. With rubber as its base ingredient, the new product puts a tough protective rubberized film over a surface to protect against excessive wear, moisture, rust and other paint casualties. Here are a few claims made for the paint by its makers, Foundry Rubber, Inc., 1050 30th st. nw.: Fire, mildew, fungus and mold resistant, elastic, softer and quieter to walk or stand on, dries within one to two hours, isn't slippery, unaffected by wide temperature variations, little or no mixing required, high abrasion proof, requires no special equipment or skilled labor to apply, low maintenance and reduces danger of shocks from light switches, grounded wires and short circuits. The paint is said to be equally effective for painting wood and metal surfaces. Moisture and air are sealed out, thus preventing decay and corrosion since mold, mildew and fungus do not grow on rubber. It's available in 10 colors.

Modern electric toasters do about everything to a piece of bread except butter it. The Samson toaster pictured below is a tandem, made especially for crowded tables where a narrow toaster is desired. Bread is placed end to end and dials set to toast to the shade desired. The buffet tray set, sold separately or with the toaster, includes a serving tray and four food dishes. Tray and side-rails are of chrome-plated steel with handles of burgundy plastic. Dishes are of lightweight, easily washed polystyrene plastic. The maker is Samson United Corporation of Rochester, N. Shoplifting Fever Sweeps The Country

NEW YORK, July 24.—Thieves and shoplifters are turning 1948 into a bonanza.

The gang which looted a Fifth Avenue store of $50,000 worth of ladies' watches, and the man who stole a dozen baby's nipples in a Waco, Texas, dime store, are unwittingly partners in a nationwide pattern of theft and burglary.

No figures for the first five months of this year are available, but the Spectator, which publishes the insurance year book, expects the pilfering to accelerate.

Last year, said the year book, insurance companies paid theft claims of $26,346,174—a 61.2 per cent jump over the previous year.

Last year a plague of shoplifting hit stores in Montgomery, Ala. Store managers said a majority of the people apprehended turned out to be of the better type of citizen. They paid their bills and lived decently. The stealing seemed to be an unexplained mania.

One manager said children in the town had organized into clubs and secret societies, and their "standing" was determined by the amount of merchandise they pilfered.

In Boston, store managers report they have apprehended 22 per cent more thieves this year than in a comparable time last year.

Rose Culture To Be Explained

A demonstration on proper rose budding methods will be given today and next Sunday at 2 p. m. in the rose gardens of Robert E. Scammell, 2810 Bladensburg rd. ne., sponsored by the Potomac Rose Society. The event is open to the public.

Skilled rose fanciers will show how new rose bushes may be grown in the home garden. Ample practice material will be available and interested amateurs and home gardeners will be instructed in the technique developed by commercial nurserymen when grafting, or transferring buds from established plants to growing rootstock.

Let's Get Down to Earth

It's Been A Rough Year for Tomato Growers

By James H. Beattie

SINCE it is probably the most important vegetable in the home garden, and because it is easy prey for insects and diseases, the tomato is the basis for many garden questions.

Diseases and insects, the latter often responsible for the spread of diseases, have been prevalent this season. Purely physiological disturbances have also added their share of troubles. Garden tomatoes should continue to yield until killed by frost and it is particularly important to employ measures to prevent or reduce the ravages of pests.

At least three groups of tomato diseases are recognized: (1) Diseases caused by bacteria and fungi. Fusarium wilt, bacterial wilt, anthracnose, early blight, late blight and many others belong in this group. (2) Virus diseases. Tomato mosaic, cucumber mosaic and others are grouped here.. (3) Non-parasitic diseases or physiological disturbances. Blossom-end rot, blossom drop, leaf roll, sun-scald and others belong here.

Only a few of the serious tomato pests are liable to attack the home garden tomato. Fusarium wilt, early blight, late blight, mosaic, blossom-end rot and leaf roll seem to occur most frequently in Washing area gardens, but don't discount the possibility that others may also make trouble. Write to Information, United States Department of Agriculture, requesting a copy of Farmers' Bulletin No. 1334 on tomato diseases and thus have information on hand in case it is needed.

USDA Photo

In tying a pruned tomato plant, the large soft string should go once around the stake so it won't slip. The stem is then supported by the string so that the fruit cluster will develop well away from the stake, thus avoiding bruising of the fruits

No Cure for Blight

FUSARIUM wilt, often erroneously referred to as "blight," causes yellowing of the lower leaves, first those on one side of the stem. The yellowed leaves wilt and die and the yellowing and wilting continues up the stem until the foliage is killed and the stem dies. Sometimes a single shoot is killed before the remainder of the plant shows much injury. If cut lengthwise the stem of a wilted plant shows a dark-brown discoloration next to the skin. Affected plants seldom produce much fruit.

The fungus causing fusarium wilt is soil-borne, and when once introduced into a garden the usual remedy is to grow wilt-resistant varieties. Marglobe, Pritchard and Rutgers are well-known sorts that possess a considerable degree of resistance to the disease. Pan America variety is very highly resistant and rarely is destroyed by the disease. Spraying and dusting are ineffective. Little can be done to save a crop badly attacked by the disease.

Early blight causes numerous brown spots on the leaves and dark, leathery, decayed spots at the stem scar on the fruits. It is worst in warm, wet weather. Copper dusts and sprays provide a reasonable check for the disease.

Late blight, which caused such severe losses in 1946, attacks the leaves, stems and fruits. The first symptoms on the leaves are greenish-black water-soaked patches which enlarge rapidly and may have a white fungus growth on the underside. The stems may also have similar spots. Water-soaked spots also appear on the fruits. These may spread until the major part of the fruit is covered. These spots remain firm and take on a brownish color. This season little damage from late blight has occurred in the Washington area. Cool, moist weather is favorable to the disease, and hot, dry weather unfavorable to it.

The disease is identical to or closely related to the late blight of potatoes, and the disease may be transmitted to tomatoes from potatoes left in the soil. It is not soil-borne, nor is it carried through the winter on dead tomato plants. Plants may bring the disease into the garden and spores may be blown in from infected plants in the locality.

Go Easy With Pruning

AT PRESENT there are no blight-resistant varieties of tomatoes. Late blight and the more common early blight leaf spot may be controlled by spraying or dusting with fixed copper fungicides, with bordeaux mixture and certain trade materials, including Dithane D-14 used with zinc sulphate and lime, Dithane Z-78 and Parzate. Bordeau mixture is liable to be injurious to young tomato plants. Later in the season it can be used if other materials are not available. Zinc dimethyl dithiocarbamate (Zerlate, Zimate, etc.) is effective against early blight and anthracnose, but not against late blight.

Treatments should start about the time the fruits begin to form and continue at intervals of 8 to 10 days during cool, wet weather, farther apart during hot, dry periods.

Blossom drop or shedding of the blooms, especially the lower or first clusters, often occurs. It seems to be aggravated by too much nitrogenous fertilizer, by excessive moisture and by both drought and cool weather. Combinations of these factors are often responsible. It is primarily an early season trouble.

Blossom-end rot is primarily a weather-induced, nonparasitic trouble. Spraying or dusting are ineffective. Uniform watering during dry weather, the avoidance of too much nitrogenous fertilizer and the liberal use of phosphate and calcium usually help.

Leaf roll has been reported many times this season. It is not caused by a virus. Severely pruned plants often show it, and the trouble is common if the soil remains wet. Affected leaves retain a dark green color with no spotting. The plants usually grow out of the trouble with no loss in yield.

$15,900 Is Low Bid For Repaint Work

A low bid of $15,900 has been submitted in a call for bids to repaint the exterior of 29 dwellings in the Foote Street public housing project. Warren & Wilkins of Washington were low bidders. National Capital Housing Authority is the owner.

ERP Rears Its Head Down on the Farm

By Fred Sailor Harvey

WHEN everyone was back from vacation we took a look around and it was easy to see which chore was most urgent. The raihs had kept the cornfield too wet to cultivate. But the weeds had gone right on growing. The knee-high corn seemed to have been planted with Canadian thistles and ragweed as a nurse crop.

So Pen brought the mares up from the pasture, fed them a good ration of corn and oats to give them strength for what lay ahead, and started cultivating the cornfield.

Ten days on green grass had left the mares soft and flabby. Sweat darkened their sides, ran down under their bellies and dripped off in a steady trickle. They looked back reproachfully when the lines slapped them forward, then turned and plodded down the rows, snapping slyly at the taller stalks of new corn until their wire muzzles had to be strapped on.

Four days later the cornfield was all cultivated, but weeds had grown so tall in the rows that the shovels of the cultivator failed to cover them over.

Pen said, "We'll have to chop them out by hand," and he sent the boys for the hoes and a file to sharpen the dull edges.

No Steel for Plows

THE sun beat down hot on the cornfield and the air lay dead and sticky between the rows. I said I'd better tend to some other chores first and join them another day. So I took the scythe and started mowing weeds in the fence corners along the lane where it was shady.

But after a while I had to stop because the scythe cut through a hornets' nest and my arm swelled up where three hornets registered thir protest.

The throbbing in my arms seemed almost like a punishment for something I'd done or failed to do. So after proving that the old mud treatment is a fake and very messy besides, I went back to the cornfield and started hoeing.

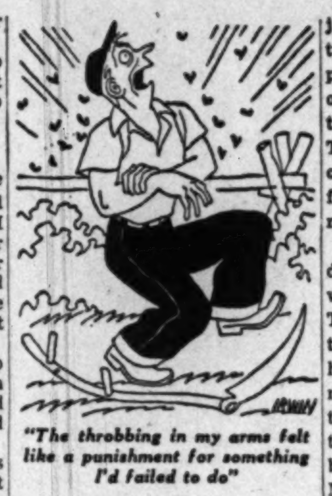
Pen is very fast with a hoe. He is thin and wiry and his hoe flashes like a knife-blade in the sun. He swivels and pivots and cleans two rows at a time. And he can talk without losing speed, which is a sign of good wind or of knowing how to hoe.

He said, "I read that the reason we can't get new farm machinery any easier is because they're using so much steel getting ready for the next war. Sounds bad, don't it?"

My hoe handle seemed to be crooked. The steel blade kept going where it wasn't aimed. Like that other steel. Quickly I picked up the stalk of green corn that had been trying to grow up into something useful, but was now sheared off at the ground. Slyly I stuck it back in the dirt and piled loose soil around so it stood up straight. Presently someone would pass by and brush against it and it would fall over quite dead. Then everyone would say "Oh, look what you've done," but they wouldn't be talking to me because they wouldn't know. Clever.

$50 Per Hour

"WHILE I was down home on vacation," said Pen, "I talked to two fellows who teamed up and bought themselves a tractor and tools at auction. Paid $2600 which was $800 over the list price. Then they rented land that wasn't being worked and planted it. After harvest time they counted up and figured they had cleared $50 for every hour they put in on that land. That made them feel so smart they went to another machinery auction. And they sold the tractor for $2598, which was a loss of $10 after using it a year. But this year they couldn't find another tractor so they're just loafing around doing not much of anything except thinking about $50 an hour."



"The throbbing in my arms felt like a punishment for something I'd failed to do"

On two rows Pen had gone so fast that I could hardly hear what he was saying. So I skipped a few feet on my single row and caught up with him.

"But there was one nice thing that happened down there this spring. There's a young fellow down there who lost one leg in the war. Ever since he came home he's been trying to get his farm back in shape. But he was having a tough time cleaning things up with only one good leg and a young kid brother for his only help.

"Well, there's a school in that county where 300 or 400 former GIs are studying farming, and they heard about this fellow. Their professors helped make all the plans and get things organized. The seed stores and machinery dealers chipped in and one day the whole crowd moved in on this fellow with bulldozers, tractors, plows and grain drills."

Heaven in One Day

"THEY HAD one squad dig a new well while another roofed the barn. One crowd was jacking up the house and by the time it was up it was already painted. They laid the whole farm out on the contour, threw up the terraces and planted the crops. The bulldozer ripped out the old orchard and underbrush and they followed right behind, planting new trees.

"A jeep with an automatic auger drilled post holes one a minute while a truck strung out the posts. They tamped them and laid on the wire so fast that you'd have had to run to keep up with the new fencing. In one working day they had that farm slicked up so the one-legged fellow and his kid brother can take care of it easy. Makes you feel like people aren't so bad after all, don't it?"

I said, "It sure does," and the chore of chopping those weeds under the hot sun suddenly seemed like nothing at all.

But then Pen added slowly, "Of course his kid brother is goin' on 17 and big and husky. So if they keep usin' all the steel for something else than farm machinery, no telling how long the kid will be there to help farm the place."

Then the sun grew weary hot; the hoe handle blistered my hands and the chopping of those awful weeds seemed an endless, hopeless job.

GI Insurance Ruling Means Billions Saving to Taxpayers

If Tillie Zazove had won her case before the Supreme Court, it would have cost American taxpayers billions of dollars over a period of years.

Tillie Zazove is the beneficiary of $5000 worth of National Service Life Insurance, left her by an American who died in a Japanese prison camp.

Mrs. Zazove's lawyers said the Government should be forced to increase its monthly payments to her so that even if she dies within 10 years of the date she started receiving payments she and the second beneficiary would be certain to get at least the face value of the insurance—$5000.

She wouldn't, the way it actually works. If she dies within those 10 years, she and the second beneficiary will collect only $3540.

Before telling why the Supreme Court ruled against Mrs. Zazove, here's a little background:

Mrs. Zazove now gets $29.50 a month. She, or the second beneficiary if she dies, are guaranteed to get that monthly payment for 10 years. After that, if she lives, Mrs. Zazove will continue to get it for the rest of her life. However, if she dies before 10 years are up the contingent beneficiary will receive no payment after the tenth year. The face value will never get paid out.

Hundreds of other beneficiaries are in the same fix. They are beneficiaries whose loved ones died before August 1, 1946, and who were over 30 at the time of the serviceman's death. Mrs. Zazove went to court about it. She said she should be getting $48.08 a month, instead of $29.50. That, times 120 months, equals the face value of the policy plus interest. A United States Circuit Court decided in her favor. The Supreme Court reversed the Circuit Court's decision. Here's why:

At $48.08 a month Mrs. Zazove, if she lived out an average life-span, would collect well over $10,000, or twice the face value of the insurance. She would receive the face value ($5000) every 10 years as long as she lived.

At $29.50 a month (what she's actually getting) she'll still receive the face value ($5000) plus interest, providing she lives out an average life-span. If the Government paid Mrs. Zazove $48.08 a month for life it would have to get the money somewhere. The premiums paid by the insured would never cover such a large payment. The same would be true for all other beneficiaries under the same settlement plan. That's where the billions of dollars of taxpayers' money come in.

In order to pay these tremendous death claims the Veterans Administration would have to do one of two things:

1. Increase premiums (probably at least double them) to get enough money into the NSLI fund to pay death claims.

2. Request special appropriations from the Congress.

The first is impossible under the law, which states premiums must be kept at the rate chargeable under the American Experience Table for Mortality (life expectancy table).

The second was never taken into account when the NSLI Act was written in 1940. The act implied that funds to pay beneficiaries would come from premiums collected from insured persons.

That's one of the main reasons the Supreme Court turned down Mrs. Zazove's claim. Justice Department attorneys who handled the case for the Government say that most commercial life insurance companies operate under exactly the same procedure.

Open Sunday, 2 to 6 P M.

Located on a shady dead end street, this tapestry brick home with its red tile mansard roof trim, in contrast with sparkling white of the freshly painted front porch, favorably complements its appearance. The house has extra width; there is a side hall entrance with living room, dining room and fully equipped kitchen on 1st floor. 3 comfortable size bedrooms, bath and open rear porch on 2nd floor. The basement has white painted walls and contains an extra room in addition to the furnace room with its new oil-fired hot water heating plant. The rear yard is small but neat in appearance with walk leading to a 1-car garage opening onto paved alley. We think the price of $12,500 will interest the family seeking the maximum in living space at low price.

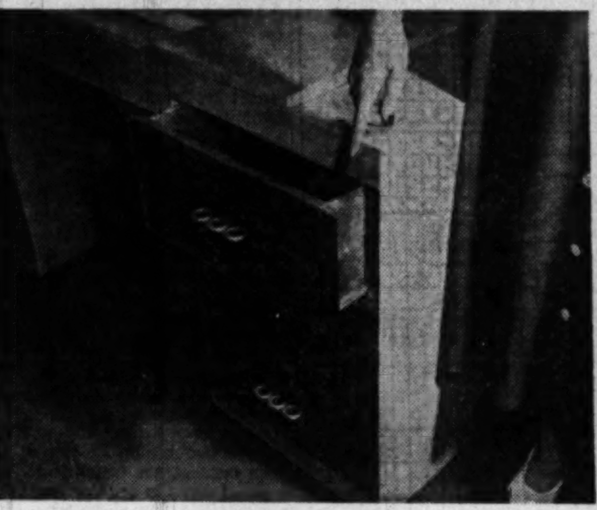
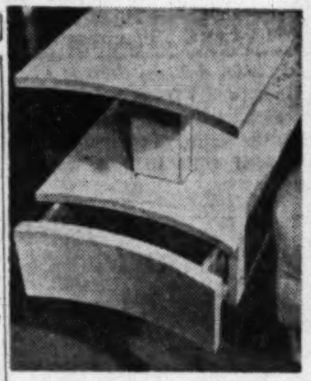
'Furniture Needs Glamor . . .'

Trade Seeks a 1948 Chippendale



Chief problem of furniture manufacturers is to bring down the cost of modern pieces to meet prices of the middle income bracket. Vanity at top costs around $300, bookcase, below, around $450.



Closeups of workmanship in fine modern furniture pieces explain why prices are high: Above, mitred joints in the drawer of a vanity of bleached mahogany plywood, and costing around $300, are cut with precision tools so they come to an absolute closure. Below, an arched drawer front of a $90 bleached, laminated mahogany end table, designed to fit closely and conceal the fact there's a drawer there at all; the veneer of the whole table is applied vertically, by hand, and gives the appearance of a table cut from a single piece of wood

By Cynthia Lowry

NEW YORK, July 24 (AP).—A world-wide hunt is on for heirs to the craftsman's mantle worn by Chippendale, Sheraton, Hepplewhite and Phyfe.

New York City's Museum of Modern Art is the sponsor of a $55,000 international competition for the development of well-designed furniture for modern homes and (here's the catch) within the range of $4000 a year incomes. The competition is backed by manufacturers and retailers all over the country.

"The furniture business needs glamorizing," explains Harry Fish, president of the museum project and head of American Furniture Associates. "We need furniture which can be produced on a mass basis for the middle-income bracket.

"No new Chippendale has come along—no one has come along for generations—with furniture which can be copied for the masses to buy."

Bigger Market Sought

Frankly, Fish confessed, furniture has not been capturing enough of the income in that big middle-bracket market.

"People haven't refurnished their homes as often as the industry thinks they should. In the old days the idea was lifetime furniture, with massive pieces all keyed to large rooms.

"That's not the conception now. Homes have changed. Rooms are smaller, ceilings are lower. There are different needs in furniture for young people, middle-aged people and older people. Furniture today should be scaled.

Fish said that the general trend—which the industry expects to pour 40 billion dollars into new homes within the next 10 years—definitely is toward modern furniture.

"It's coming from the West Coast," he said. "In developing modern furniture the emphasis is on warm climates where there is freedom in the use of colors. As the trend moves toward the East—and colder climates—the reception becomes mixed. Lots of this modern is unsuitable, too flamboyant for the surroundings."

He said that attempts have been made to combine modern with "traditional" or period furniture.

"It can be done beautifully," he said, "but it is difficult."

Nevertheless, Fish maintains, "functional modern" is the trend of the future in furniture.

"It is no fad," Fish emphasized. "In the small-to-average sized room it's possible to work out many combinations with it. It's practical and it's good to look at—when it's well done. Of course, lots of what has been done has been bad."

The whole furniture business, he said, has been in a state of rapid transition. During the war when practically everything was scarce, people were buying what furniture was available as fast as they could—and paying cash. Now they are buying it on credit. The cash is going into toasters and washing machines.

"There is lots of good furniture being made today," Fish said, "but the good stuff costs too much for the average income."

Furniture designers, he said, frankly concede furniture design has not kept pace with developments in other fields.

With four months to go before the competition closes, almost 1200 entries have been received—463 of them from 31 foreign countries.

"We hope we have something in this that will revolutionize the industry," Fish commented.

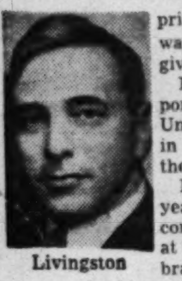
Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Philadelphia, July 24.—The first sample of corporation reports for April, May and June provides no indication of the long-heralded squeeze on earnings. American business still thrives on inflation.

About three out of four industrial companies have managed to keep prices and gross receipts sufficiently ahead of rising wages, raw materials costs and freight charges to give stockholders something to be thankful for.



Livingston

Earnings for 83 companies, excluding such corporate giants as General Electric, Shell Union Oil, Union Carbide & Carbon, came to 91 million dollars in the second quarter, a gain of 23 per cent over the corresponding months of 1947.

If the bigger companies are included, the year-to-year gain is 34 per cent, a suggestion that larger companies are faring better than the smaller ones at this stage of postwar competition. As established brand names reappear in retail and wholesale markets—as the bigger companies are better able to satisfy customers' demands—less-established sellers lose sales or have to make price concessions.

Deficits, Too

The sample cannot be regarded as comprehensive. No major steel, auto or retail company is represented. And because retail sales have not exactly kept pace with costs, merchandisers' profits have been under pressure. This might reduce the over-all percentage gain over a year ago when final returns come in.

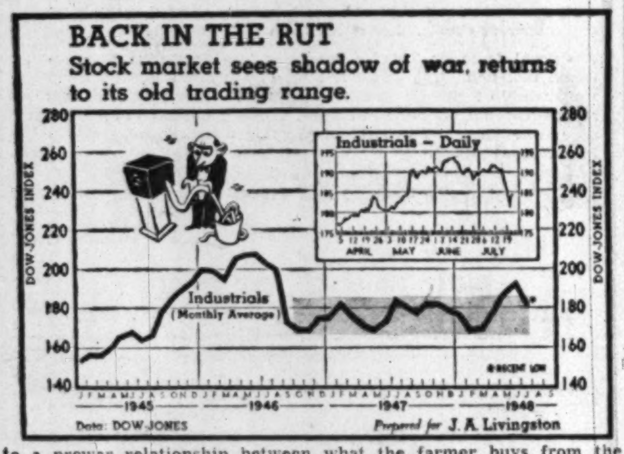
Here and there a deficit popped up: General Plywood, Glenmore Distilleries and Caterpillar Tractor, this last the result of a 35-day strike. Yet the general direction of earnings was clear. Final returns for 1948 are likely to be ahead of the high 1947 level. Inflation has not yet resulted in general sales resistance, overpriced inventories, big markdowns, curtailed production and losses.

United States Steel put the clincher on higher costs for industry when it raised prices 9.6 per cent to compensate for the finally granted 9 per cent increase to steel workers and higher costs of coal and other raw materials. The price boost comes atop the shift to an f. o. b. mill pricing system, which also added to the price of steel to fabricators and other consumers.

Gradually higher priced steel will make its way throughout the industrial price structure. Already Detroit talks of another boost in auto quotations. Yale & Towne has just announced advances on industrial trucks and scales. And International Nickel raised the price of nickel 6¼ cents, to 40 cents a pound.

The Farmer vs. the City Man

There's a Pollyanna side—if you want to look at it. Industrial prices still have a long way to go to catch up with the rise in farm prices. The same applies to wages. Since 1939 the farm price index has gone up 200 per cent, the index of industrial prices only 84 per cent, and weekly wages 116 per cent. Thus a realignment, an approach to a prewar relationship between what the farmer buys from the urban worker and what the urban worker buys from the farmer, is taking place, though admittedly farm purchasing power was low to begin with.



BACK IN THE RUT

Stock market sees shadow of war, returns to its old trading range.

Data: DOW-JONES Prepared for J. A. Livingston

Here's the way the city dwellers may get a break. Wheat is off about 85 cents a bushel from its 1948 high. For that reason, Secretary of Agriculture Brannan has asked bakers to reduce the price of bread. Corn is off about 65 cents a bushel. Butter and lard are likewise down. If food prices drop, then the buying power of the wage dollar may rise. That will leave a slightly larger proportion of the pay envelope for nonfood items—home furnishings, clothing, rent, automobiles. Also it may take the heat off rank-and-file pressure for higher wages when the next round of labor-management contract negotiations rolls around next spring. It could be sufficient to arrest the wage-price-wage roundelay.

Surprise Takes Wall Street

The stock market has come back halfway from its 9-point decline on July 15, 16, 17. The Berlin crisis took Wall Street by surprise. Understandably. During both the Republican and Democratic conventions, domestic political news crowded foreign headlines on the front pages. Readers gobbled up everything about political candidates and tactics. Foreign news was secondary.

Then in the wee morning hours of Thursday, July 15, the Democratic Convention drew to a close. Editors once again found front-page room for happenings in Europe and the meaning of Berlin—the threat to peace—crashed home. Panicky selling orders poured into Wall Street. And the stock market slipped back into the 21-month rut it had just climbed out of (see chart).

Stocks were vulnerable to begin with. Railroad shares had been advancing since February 10—that is, for five months. Industrials had been pushing higher since mid-March—that is, for three months. So a reaction was about due. The war scare set it off. And when the war scare abated, when it became clear that hostilities weren't going to happen the next day or the day after, bargain hunters got busy. Stocks began a slow day-to-day recovery.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, July 24 (AP).—Oats kept on going downward on the Board of Trade today despite the fact that July contracts have been closed out. The weakness in oats upset corn and had some influence in easing wheat prices.

Many traders had believed that winding-up of dealings in July contracts yesterday would create a firmer tone in grains, particularly oats. They were disappointed. Oats never showed much strength and before the session was through all deliveries reached new seasonal lows.

Wheat and corn were steady at the start and corn at one time moved ahead briskly, largely on commission house buying. But the dragging tendency of oats was too much for the rest of the market. Corn sold off rapidly toward the close.

Wheat ended ½ to 1⅜ lower, September 2.30⅜@2.30¼. Corn was 2 cents lower to ⅛ higher, September 1.74¼@1.74. Oats were 1⅜ to 2 cents lower, September 74½@74. Rye was ⅛ higher, December 1.87⅝, and soybeans were unchanged to 1 cent lower, November 2.98.

Very favorable reports on oats yields caused the continued slump in that grain. With weather clear, and expected to remain so over the weekend, harvesting was going ahead rapidly. Yields from parts of Iowa ranged from 50 to 100 bushels to an acre.

The slump in wheat came in the face of rather favorable price making news. The Government raised its buying price for cash wheat, premiums on the cash grain have advanced in Texas and Oklahoma and extreme tightenness was said to have developed in the flour market. The latter development was attributed to a more intensive inquiry from export sources.

According to the Southwestern Miller, a trade publication, mills were paying 8 to 9 cents a bushel over the Chicago September future for No. 1 hard wheat in the Southwest. That was a jump of 4 to 5 cents from recent lows, but the publication added, "Even with higher bids wheat appeared to be extremely difficult to buy due to tight holdings by farmers."

Full Effects of Steel Boosts Expected In Indefinite Future

Pittsburgh, July 24 (AP).—The gigantic United States Steel Corp.—which dislikes to be considered a steel industry pacemaker in wages and prices—has done it again. No one can be sure yet what the far-reaching effects will be.

By granting some 170,000 steelworkers wage increases averaging 13 cents an hour, and by raising prices an average of $9.34 a ton, "Big Steel" set an example which other basic steel producers were quick to follow.

Yet to be recorded are inevitable raises in prices by fabricators—those firms which use steel as a raw material in making everything from pins to autos.

The result is tremendous inflationary pressure. The ironic part of United States Steel's role in the development is the corporation's admitted failure in trying to stem the inflationary tide last April by holding firm on wages and slashing prices 25 million dollars a year.

That anti-inflation experiment was a lost gamble because not all other steel firms followed suit by cutting prices and because steelmaking costs continued their relentless climb. Coal costs went up appreciably, for example, when John L. Lewis won a $1-a-day pay boost for his United Mine Workers. Freight rate increases are still another example.

One concession was won on U. S. Steel when it granted pay hikes to Phil Murray's CIO-United Steelworkers. Murray finally agreed to a percentage increase (nine per cent) instead of the straight cents per hour jump he has previously gained.

Steelman pointed out that the difference between the pay of skilled and semi-skilled workers has shrunk steadily since the first union contract in 1937. The new pay hikes, ranging from 9½ to 25 cents, tend to correct that trend.

Meanwhile, U. S. Steel Corp. prices for four typical products rose like this: hot rolled bars, from 2.15 cents per pound in 1940 to 3.35 cents nuow plates from 2.10 cents to 3.40, structural steel from 2.10 to 3.25 cents; and rails from 2.00 to 3.20.

The new wages bring the steelworkers hourly pay to an average $1.71, compared with about 85 cents in 1940. The average weekly pay will be close to $65 a week for a 38 hour week.

Those gains will be reflected in higher prices, Benjamin F. Fairless, president of the steel firm, predicted. Those higher prices mean you'll pay more for that washing machine or lawn mower.

Faricy Denies Overcharges By Railroads

A spokesman for American railroads has denied as "wholly false" recent testimony before a House committee that the railroads set up a committee during the war for the purpose of maintaining rates charged the Government.

William T. Faricy, president of the Association of American Railroads, made the denial in a letter to Chairman Bender (R., Ohio) of a House expenditures subcommittee.

The testimony to which Faricy excepted was given before Bender's group which is investigating alleged multi-million dollar overcharges by the railroads on Government business.

Faricy told Bender that the estimated two billion dollars in alleged overcharges which the Government seeks to recover from the railroads is nearly three times the net working capital of all the railroads.

The AAR chief said that if the Government collects it probably will bankrupt most of the railroads and bring an abrupt halt to the billion-dollar-a-year railroad improvement program.

Faricy denied the railroads organized a wartime traffic executive chairmen's committee for the purpose of holding up rates.

Thomas F. Proctor, Postoffice Department official, had testified July 7 that the "real cutting edge" of the alleged overcharge plan was a four-man board which made the recommendations on how much the Government should pay the roads for hauling freight.

Faricy said the committee was created at the request of Joseph B. Eastman, director of the Office of Defense Transportation and approved by the Department of Justice.

Other witnesses said some of the people who helped determine the rates were Army representatives who formerly worked for the roads. They testified some of these men went back to work for the roads at higher salaries after the war.

Faricy said these men were placed in uniform at the request of the military forces; later they were given back their railroad jobs as Congress required under the selective service law.

He said the Interstate Commerce Commission has the final decision whether the rates were reasonable and he added the Government never was charged more than commercial shippers. In most cases, he said, charges were less.

Maryland Tobacco

Upper Marlboro, Md., July 24 (AP).—Volume this week on the southern Maryland auction tobacco markets was the heaviest of the season, according to the United States Department of Agriculture and the Maryland State Department of Markets.

Net sales amounted to 3,332,818 pounds averaging $42.57 per hundred. The average was $1.04 less than the week before due to the larger proportion of tips and nondescript marketed.

Net auction sales for the season through yesterday amounted to 25,397,781 pounds at an average of $43.18. Net receipts of the Baltimore hogshead market for the season were reported as approximately 2,616,000 pounds.

Prices continued to improve for the majority of lower quality tobacco grades. Gains of 50 cents to $3 a hundred were most numerous.

Large sales are looked for during the next few days. Only four more weeks of auctions remain. The closing date has been set for August 20.

Changes in grade prices:

HEAVY CROP—Choice red, 63.00, unchanged; fine cherry red, 62.00, unchanged; good cherry red, 60.00, unchanged; low cherry red, 33.00, up $3; low greenish, 17.00, up 50 cents.

TIPS—Low cherry red, 18.50, up 50 cents; low red, 19, unchanged; low chocolate-color, 11.25, up 50 cents.

THIN CROP—Fine cherry red, 63.00, unchanged; good cherry red, 62.00, unchanged; fair cherry red, 61.00, unchanged; low red, 40.00, up $3.

Jeep Appears in New Dress

ADAPTATION OF WAR CREATION—This is the sports phaeton model of that rugged military vehicle—the jeep. Just introduced by Willys-Overland, it is styled in the continental manner. Mounted on a wheelbase of 104 inches, it is powered by the jeep engine. It is finished in brilliant yellow with contrasting black trim (as shown) or in fire wagon red

Court Reverses Dixie Cup Award

Chicago, July 24 (AP).—The Dixie Cup Co.'s patent infringement suit against the Paper Container Manufacturing Co. of Chicago is scheduled for further proceedings in Federal Court.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals has reversed a District Court judgment awarding damages of $2,096,062 against the paper container company of Easton, Pa., and the case has been remanded to Federal Judge John P. Barnes for further proceedings.

The suit, in the courts since 1938, originally charged infringement of 14 patents on paper cup manufacturing machines. Ten of the patent infringement allegations were withdrawn prior to the original trial, and only one was involved in the Circuit Court proceedings.

The appeals court ruled that Dixie was entitled to triple damages of $154,027 for infringement of one type of machine. It held, however, that Dixie was not entitled to recover damages on two other machinery types.

Brass, Wire Mills Report Best Orders in 2½ Years

New York, July 24 (AP).—Brass and wire mills and other makers of copper products report that new business during June topped any other month in the past two and one-half years.

Orders on the books of copper and brass goods manufacturers last month required 147,819 tons of copper, compared with a 124,272-ton requirement for May orders.

June bookings were reported the best for any month since January, 1946, when orders taken required 149,703 tons of copper.

Some industry members attributed a large part of the June increase to customer anticipation of price increases.

U. S. Lines Buys Liner America

John M. Franklin, president of the United States Lines, announced yesterday his company has concluded negotiations with the Maritime Commission for the repurchase of the America, now under bareboat charter from the commission, which acquired ownership of the vessel from the United States Lines in September, 1942, when it was serving as a Navy troop transport.

In making the announcement, Franklin said that his company had been looking forward to the return of the vessel as a part of its program of postwar development of its passenger fleet, a program which also includes the construction of a 65-million-dollar superliner.

Department Store Sales Gain, Bank Says

Department store sales in Washington during June were 13 per cent greater in dollar volume than last year, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported yesterday. The figure is based on returns from six stores. Sales of 91 stores surveyed in the region served by the bank showed a gain of 10 per cent.

Sales in this city in the first six months of 1948 showed an increase of four per cent and in the whole district were five per cent greater.

Lumber Shipments

Lumber shipments of 387 mills reporting to the National Lumber Trade Barometer were 11.3 per cent below production for the week ending July 17. In the same week now orders of these mills were 11.4 per cent above production. Unfilled order files of the reporting mills amount to 58 per cent of stocks.

Too Hot to Work!

At Hollywood Parties

The Baubles Are Mostly Props

By Aline Mosby

HOLLYWOOD, July 24 (U.P.).—Next time we go to a big party out here we won't be quite so staggered by the fancy dishes and silverware. The movie stars, like everybody else, sometimes rent party props, too.

Even the party chairs warmed by celebrities maybe get hauled back by the renting company the next day.

The party props company is Abbey Rents. It also rents wheelchairs and crutches, and there must be a connection there someplace. Anyway, this chain store has the reasons for its success doped out:

Parties often end up with guests tossing glasses around like rose petals. Then there are folks who go home with spoons in their pockets, or toss chairs in the swimming pool. It's cheaper for a hostess to rent those things, even though she has to pay for the breakage.

'Take It Back'

OUR AUTHORITY on this is Mark Baylin, head of the Hollywood branch. He says Atwater Kent gives enough parties to nearly keep Abbey Rents in business (and the whole town in free drinks.)

Even Barbara Hutton, one of the world's richest ladies, often serves eats on rented china. Once her butler eyed the silverware an Abbey man brought around and huffed:

"This is dreadful stuff. Go back and bring me some better silver; buy new pieces if you have to!"

The rental company did.

The roughest party Baylin remembers was a 300-guest champagne wedding reception for a famous actress, he won't say who. When the Abbey truck came around to pick up the champagne glasses, 50 were reduced to powder.

The host explained some guests tossed them at the fireplace, an old Hollywood custom.

"During the war we had a terrific loss," said Mr. B. "We figure the customers were keeping the dishes, and paying for breakage, because they were so hard to buy."

Still Going Strong

ONLY ONE customer hasn't followed the rule of having borrowed equipment stacked and clean the morning after. This lady's party was still in high gear when the pick-up truck arrived at 11 a. m.

Clifton Webb's a heavy Abbey customer; he goes in for garden parties. Keenan Wynn, Paul Henreid, Joan Crawford and Frank Sinatra are big renters of party chairs and tables for their kids.

Abbey's sickroom supply department is just as lively. It outfits hospital rooms for the movies; last week it sold a wheelchair to a gent who wishes to attach it to his motorized lawn mower.

Only one client has rented both sickroom and party supplies at the same time. This had nothing to do with injuries sustained while making whoopee, however. A radio actor tossed a stag party, and served dinner in hospital equipment ordinarily not used for that purpose.

A BALLET teacher sized up the movie stars from various angles recently and decided they didn't know how to walk, period. Or stand. Or sit down. Or stand up. But the worst view is when the player yelps her exit line, turns her back to the lens and prances away, this guy says. He is handsome Nico Charisse, of the dancing Charisses. Nico is Cyd Carisse's former husband. He teaches movie stars how to leap around on their toes, formerly at MGM and now for his own dance school.

In this process the stars also learn how to walk, etc., so he's making inroads on those bad rear views, but there are plenty left, he says.

"They walk and stand with their feet apart," he shudders. "They look like ducks, puppets on strings. Watch a gazelle, or any other graceful animal. They put one foot before the other, so they walk in curves."

Many movie stars—and most people, for that matter—sit down hips first, he went on. But the actress who's flown through the air in black tights knows how to descend to a chair, sort of like an elevator, he says.

"It's a matter of rhythm," explained Charisse, and leaped half-way across his fancy ballet studio. "Ingrid Bergman has rhythm in her walk, and when she stands and poses her outline has balance, which is rhythm, too."

He knows a pack of actresses who are more worried about the shade of their hair than their backside view. Once a starlet came to Mr. C. for some lessons before she tested for a role. She always showed up late, and often she missed.

"When I scolded her she said, 'Oh, that doesn't matter, the studio only cares how I look.' Well, she never learned grace, and she never got far in the movies, either."

Nico taught both his former wife and Ann Miller when they were just beginners. Now he plays professor to big stars as well as wide-eyed hopefuls. He says he'd like to teach every actress in the business, which is understandable.

Paulette Goddard cuts a mean toe dance at the Charisse studio. This has helped her tennis, she says, besides her snake-hipping for the films. Marie MacDonald's a Charisse pupil, too, which is something, for everybody's always said "the body" has a perfect shape.

Well, sir, "the body" has a bum toe, we'll have you know. It turns to the left, see, which some people call pigeon-toed. Mr. Charisse hopes to put this to rights.

Nico says you're never too old to learn, and he has pupil Constance Collier, who's 65, to prove it. Constance is right in there pas de deux-ing with the young fry, by golly. Nico says floating around on ballet shoes takes the creaks out of her joints.

Hollywood Sights . . . and Sounds

VAN JOHNSON attending an art class at Beverly Hills High School . . . Gary Cooper sweating off pounds at a pneumatic drill for "Fountainhead" scenes . . . June Allyson wandering down an MGM street in her "Little Women" nightgown.

Margaret O'Brien posing for some publicity pictures in a sweater . . . Susan Hayward telling about her cut-up twin boys. "When I go out of town, I don't hire a nurse; I get a stunt man," says she.

Lou Costello telling the "Mexican Hayride" crew how he once burned down his family's house . . . Cary Grant having a suit fitted between scenes of "Every Girl Should Be Married."

Perry Como changing his vacation from Honolulu to New York City . . . "The Younger Brothers" cast staging a raid on the "South of St. Louis" company while both were on location at the Warners' lot.

Giveaway Pays Because It Pulls Huge Audiences

By Wayne Oliver

NEW YORK, July 24 (AP).—The radio giveaway bandwagon rolls on, with indications it will continue unchecked until the public has had enough.

The rash of giveaways seems to boil down to this: Most of the programs that pay off to contestants also pay off in large audiences—and that's what sponsors are after.

There has been some speculation that the new broadcasting code put into effect by the industry July 1 might curb the giveaway trend. It has a provision saying broadcasters should avoid programs "designed to 'buy' the radio audience, by requiring it to listen in hope of reward, rather than for quality of entertainment."

The four major network officials are reviewing their giveaway programs.

However, network officials take the position that most if not all of their giveaway programs are entertaining and would be good shows without the prizes at stake.

One official said the public is pretty well aware that the individual listener's chance of being called by telephone on any single giveaway program is 1 in 20 million, or less. Thus, he argued, it's unlikely a listener would tune in such a program purely because of the extremely remote chance he might have of winning a prize.

Another, from a rival network, used NBC's "Truth or Consequences" to make the point that most listeners tune in because they find giveaways entertaining rather than because they hope to win anything themselves. During that program's "Walking Man" contest early this year, contestants were chosen only from among persons who had written letters. Yet, this official pointed out, an audience survey showed that for every person who had written in, there were 40 or more other listeners who tuned in although they had no possible chance of winning.

Since then the number of giveaways has snowballed and audience surveys indicate they're popular with the radio public.

So She Writes a Book

Here's a Girl Says Filmtown's Immoral

NEW YORK, July 24 (U.P.).—Miss Jay Presson, author of an about-to-be-published novel involving Hollywood's morality, said today you can take that fabulous movie town and keep it. It's too immoral, even for a broad-minded girl.

It's simply loathsome," she said. "I'm not exactly a Sunday school girl, but some Hollywood antics were so indecent they shocked me."

Hollywood antics (indecent and otherwise) are the basis of Miss Presson's novel, "Spring Riot" which is to be published by Rinehart & Co. in October. And while she claims it isn't autobiographical, her own blonde-haired, green-eyed beauty, her long skinny frame and her soft drink diet duplicate her description of her novel's heroine, Destry March.

Destry has some pretty wild Hollywood experiences including some love affairs with movie actors, directors, et al.

Since renouncing Hollywood, she's been writing scripts for radio and acting in them, writing her book and taking dancing lessons.

He's Mike-Bound

Science Shackles the Entertainer

By Richard L. Coe

IF COMING GENERATIONS don't get completely atrophied, you can't say that science hasn't tried.

Take the microphone. The other night, watching try-outs for "Going Native," we were struck by science's complete mastery of embryo entertainers. Most of the early acts auditioned for the Capitol's annual revue relied solely on an individual leaning on a microphone, literally and figuratively.

With the exception of several purely visual performers—gymnasts, magicians and dancers—the hopeful entertainers were chained in one spot by the little black box.

And even dancers lean to the mike to pick up their taps; the day of the soft-shoe is distant indeed and the raty-ta-clip of taps now comes to us muffled in the padding of electrons and tubes.

Quite apart from giving us the picture of entertainers physically unable to move, the mike has further dulled our senses with sounds and tones that certainly aren't the real thing. The sound of the human voice has taken on a metallic timbre, a shiny net of tone completely covers the warm, clear quality of even the most marvelous vocal instruments.

Only in the Bath

THAT this is affecting the coming generation of entertainers is easy to see—and is well known by all who follow that well-lighted world. The influence of the mike performers is heard in the moaning quality that maintains its fashion through the seasons with the singers who chant to us not only across the footlights of the larger theaters but even in the cozy nests that specialize in liquids. It isn't exaggerating things much to say that most people hear song sans electric tubes only in the solitude of their own baths.

And audiences are getting quite as bad. Not only does the future cast a frightening shadow of folks sitting around their own living rooms bug-eyed at their television sets, the movie theaters themselves are pandering to this incipient human inertia.

Take the drive-in theaters. Why, they've even got one in Asbury Park, N. J., which accommodates 500 cars and 25 planes. This "fly-in" theater is designed for folks so lazy that they sit in their own planes to watch a movie.

This latest fandango of the age of science is the baby of a former Navy flier whose customers land on an airstrip, are taxied up to a ramp facing the screen. As in the auto-theater's ultimate comforts, speakers are hauled up to the plane, the customers cozy up in the cabins and watch the flicks. To get back to the take-off strip, there's a jeep to haul Massa Gotrock's plane. If this isn't the end, I don't know what will be.

And though receipts are down in all branches of the entertainment industry—movies, theaters, night clubs and radio—the sky's still the limit with the drive-ins.

There are at least 350 of these now in operation; before the war there were maybe 100; by winter the total may reach 450. The only thing that holds back those openings is the shortage in structural steel and the general tightness of the labor market.

Our three local drive-ins aren't complaining, at least above a whisper, though they're probably not doing the bang-up trade of a year ago.

Biggest boast of these spots is that they bypass the sitter question. Baby sucks his bottle in the back-seat crib and there's nothing to keep mom and pop from watching the show.

A handy sidelight as an income-getter for the drive-ins—as it is in many a theater across the land—are the food-drink concessions, which in a large outdoor movie shell bring in 50 per cent of the gross.

At the Watergate

Opera Coming Back To Capital Next Month

By Paul Hume

OPERA's back again! On August 4 the Lyric Opera Association will present the first of eight operas at the Watergate. The new company will draw upon established artists and new singers. It has made real progress in the direction of engaging young American singers of talent.

Under the direction of Modeste da Silva, the troupe has arranged for local appearances of Metropolitan members Frederick Jagel, Francesco Valentino, Bruno Landi, Robert Weede, Thomas Hayward, Florence Kirk and Thelma Altman. Artists from other companies whose names are known for their good work include Eugene Conley and Eva De Luca.

Operas will be under the direction of Giuseppe Bamboschek who did fine work with the late Philadelphia La Scala Company in their 1946-47 season in Constitution Hall. An orchestra of Washington musicians will accompany the operas, which will be staged on the new barge at the Watergate.

This is a recently formed company. It has no connection in personnel or business with the recent Chicago Opera Company, so-called. Tickets are handled through the Patrick Hayes office in the Raleigh Hotel lobby.

The opera schedule runs: Wednesday, August 4: Aida; Thursday: Traviata; Friday: Carmen; Sunday, the 8th: Barber of Seville; Wednesday: Madame Butterfly; Thursday: Rigoletto; Friday: Traviata; Sunday, the 15th: Cavalleria Rusticana and Pagliacci.

This renewed operatic agitation points up the need for a local chorus willing, interested and able to learn the choral portions of standard operas. The chorus with this new company will be drawn from the same small bunch of choristers that has been supplying such companies for years. If a local chorus were completely prepared with the music of Aida, Carmen, Traviata, Rigoletto and the others, arrangements could have been made to engage them. It would have guaranteed us finer opera than we can anticipate at the present time.

One of the men behind the Lyric Opera Association is Jules Falk, who for years promoted the excellent productions at the Atlantic City Steel Pier, where such now famous singers as Virginia MacWatters, Arthur Kent, Alfred Drake and many more appeared.

Tickets range from 90 cents to $2.50. There are few operas more popular than the eight listed. Bamboschek is a respected conductor of wide experience.

Limited Possibilities

THE Lyric Opera Association says it is determined to help the American singer who lacks opportunities to appear in opera comparable to the chances afforded their European

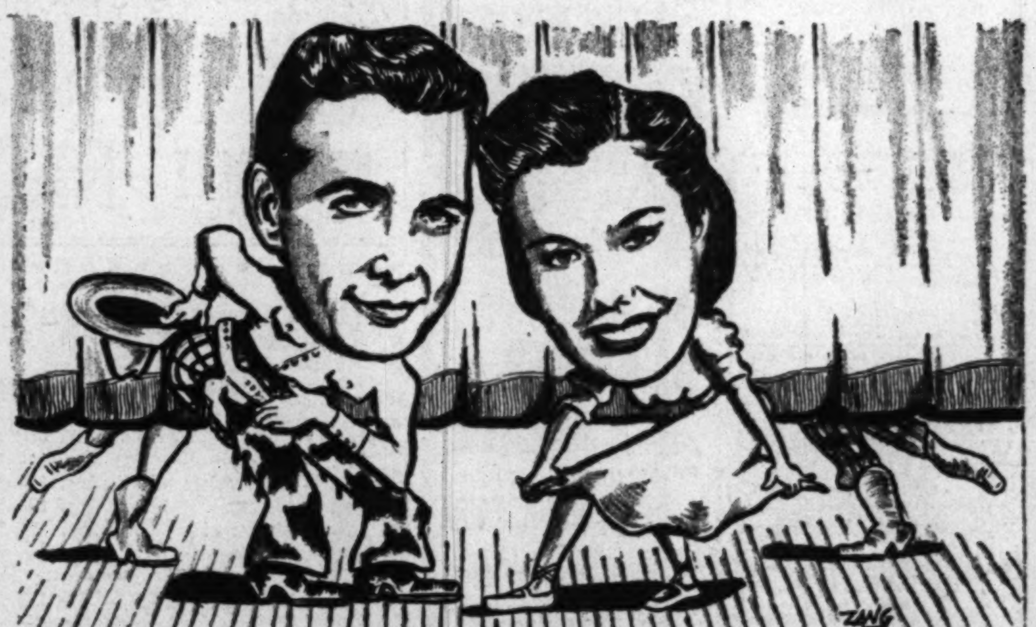
Curtain to Fall on More Than 'Oklahoma!'



Wilton Clary and Carolyn Tanner, as Artist Zang sees them in their roles of Curly and Laurey in "Oklahoma!" The closing of the musical Saturday night also brings down the theater's curtain, at least temporarily, as a legitimate house.

THOUGH the National's curtain comes down with tragic finality on Saturday night's performance of "Oklahoma!" the historic theater's last week of "round actors" promises to be in the great tradition.

"Oklahoma!" will give a special performance tonight and already only orchestra seats remain for the rest of the musical's performances.

At the close of the New York run six weeks ago, Treasurer Al Hildreth reminisced over some of the faithful who'd seen the musical again and again. A priest had seen it nearly 50 times and the Duke and Duchess of Windsor at least three. The late Robert Benchley saw every evening performance for two weeks straight. Actress Florence Reed had Thursday matinee reservations for months. Mrs. Roosevelt saw it many times both in New York and Washington.

That "Oklahoma!" should be closing the National at the culmination of the antisegregation fracas is viewed by many local theatergoers as a happy, however slight, augury for the theater's future. Somehow they can't believe that so happy, tuneful a triumph will be the last of living theater on E street.

WHERE HISTORY ENDED and romance began. This scene from Paul Green's "The Lost Colony," performed through July and August at Roanoke Island, N. C., is the turning point in the drama. Up to the time when the colonists bid farewell to their ship returning to England, Green's play follows fairly closely the recorded history of the group. There the record ends and Green's story is a poignant and imaginative solution of the fate which befell those left behind

Wilde Classic to Reach Olney Stage on Tuesday

COMEDY of all schools has dominated the Olney country stage in recent weeks, and this week brings one of the neatest in the language, Oscar Wilde's epigrammatic three acts, "The Importance of Being Ernest."

Directing this highly stylized wit will be Jose Ferrer, the young American actor who recently scored so happily with Eugenie Leontovich in the Olney's "Twentieth Century." Ferrer also will play one of the young men to whom the name Ernest achieved unexpected importance.

In the role of the witty, windy Lady Bracknell, Viola Roache will have the richest part of her Olney season. Others in the cast will include Phyllis Hill (Mrs. Ferrer), Donald Stevens, William Nichols, Grant Gordon and Sara Seegar.

The engagement of "The Importance of Being Ernest" replaces one originally announced for Ferrer in "Charley's Aunt," rights to which have been withdrawn as a musical version of the old farce is in preparation.

The Wilde comedy opens its week Tuesday. This afternoon and tonight Sidney Blackmer and Mary Orr will conclude their run in the comedy of an Arizona boarding house, "Chicken Every Sunday."

Pickups from Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD, July 24 (AP).—Joan Fontaine finished her last scene of "You Gotta Stay Happy" and commented to her producer-husband: "Mr. Dozer, it's been a pleasure to work on your picture." His reply: "Thank you; I might be able to use you in some other pictures." Joan now takes a six-month vacation for the birth of her baby.

David Niven, who leaves for England July 29 on the Britannica, is wasting no time. While enacting an 80-year-old in "Enchantment," he fitted wigs for "Scarlet Pimpernel," which he'll make in England.

Universal-International plunked out around $50,000 for the Broadway, "Mexican Hayride," and is ending up with little more than a title and a song for the money. Most of the show is not being used in the Abbott and Costello version, only the Cole Porter hit tune, "I Love You," remaining. Lou himself provided the gimmick for the picture—he's samba-happy.

U-I may be the next studio to be marked for an upheaval. The studio is learning—the hard way—that its action melodramas are doing much better business than the prestige films aimed for academy awards.

Alan Ladd will help glamorize the United States mail service in "Postal Inspector." That nearly completes film coverage of Government bureaus, with the possible exception of Labor Department . . . Elsa Lanchester flew to New York for some dress fittings and returned without missing a performance at the Turnabout Theater.

Riegger Symphony Wins

WALLINGFORD RIEGGER'S Third Symphony, premiered by the CBS Symphony under Dean Dixon at the Columbia University festival, won the annual orchestral award of the New York Music Critics Circle as the outstanding American symphonic work played for the first time in New York in 1947-48.

Stravinsky's ballet score for "Orpheus" was given a special citation, but the circle, said President Miles Kastendieck, reached no decision on an award for chamber music.

Brott Conducting in Europe

Alexander Brott, Canadian conductor and composer, has sailed for Europe to conduct concerts in England, France, the Netherlands, Sweden, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy and Luxembourg. He will feature his own and other Canadian music, most of which will be heard in Europe for the first time. His major purpose will be to introduce his symphonic suite, "From Sea to Sea," which has attained recognition on this side of the Atlantic. Sir Thomas Beecham will conduct it with the Royal Philharmonic in London in October.

Drive-In Spots Have Time Getting Films

THE tales the drive-in set tell of their trade are in the best tradition of the fustest-with-the-mostest. In one New England city there was a drive-in fairly close to town. Someone came along, built one a bit closer. Owner A came along and put up a screen in the very next field. Now owner B has an option to build across the highway from his first spot.

Traffic problems arise, too. It's naturally not acute in such a wide-open area as Texas, which boasts some 90 of the breed. (Ohio's in second place with about 80.)

But the environs of Cleveland have some 55 drive-ins in operation and Minneapolis has 12. Things are so tough with the Cleveland traffic situation that the city's traffic boss is going to ask the Ohio Legislature to enact regulations controlling roadside developments.

From the viewpoint of the drive-in owners, product is the hardest nut to crack. In their early days it was easy to get by cheap playing old pictures at flat rentals. Now the exhibitors see that there's gold in them gulleys and they're charging a percentage on their films. This, in turn, has the drive-ins demanding newer pictures and the dreamiest of them are thinking of how they can get first-runs.

All this, mind you, is to keep the human frame from moving about. Science wants us to just sit while the little amps do all the work.

Cross Roads Offering

Wednesday night the Cross Roads production of "Mr. and Mrs. North" will begin its second and final week in the red barn theater at Baileys Cross Roads.

Heading the cast of the mystery-comedy are Sue Fullilove, David Goodman, Robert Walker, Betty Carpenter and Roger Doan.

Rita Johnson's Happy

Hollywood, July 24 (AP).—Rita Johnson isn't a star. She doesn't have a swimming pool, and she has never been suspended by a studio for temperamental reasons.

And yet she has never missed a weekly pay check since she arrived in Hollywood five years ago. With some 30 pictures to her credit, she is one of the most substantially established featured players in the colony.

'Engaged' Ends Tonight

The last performance of "Engaged" the W. S. Gilbert comedy, will be given tonight, 8:30 p. m., at Catholic University.
Carpenter and Roger Doan.

Along Broadway

Paul Hartman Has 'Angel's' Prices Clipped

By Jack O'Brian

NEW YORK, July 24 (AP).—Kitty Carlisle is taking time out from being Mrs. Moss Hart to act for Theron Bamberger at his Bucks County Playhouse in "O Mistress Mine." . . . Kitty will make up for the absence of songs in the Terence Rattigan play, which served the Lunts so profitably, by interpolating a few into the plot.

Paul Hartman, a persuasive businessman as well as a clever clown, talked the management of 'Angel in The Wings" into lowering its ticket price top from $6 to $4.80 . . . "Mister Roberts" is the only production on the stem for which tickets are actually tough to get . . . Agencies are even "dumping" a few back into the boxoffice at "A Streetcar Named Desire" and "Inside U. S. A.," which were right up there until the slump slapped the theater.

Thomas Mitchell, while touring in "An Inspector Calls," didn't let any grass grow under his greasepaint, and has dashed off a new play tentatively dubbed "I am I." . . . Tom is no stranger to pen and ink, stage division, having written other dramatic tidbits including "Little Accident." In recent years, however, he's stuck to acting.

"Love Life," the new musical by Kurt Weill (Lady in the Dark) and Alan Jay Lerner (Brigadoon) has won a prize showcase, the Forty-Sixth Street Theater, where it's scheduled to open October 7. . . Elia Kazan will direct.

Rueful producers say the luckiest production in town is "The Play's The Thing," which flies to Central City, Colo., for three weeks at the drama festival there, thereby evading the deepest fathoms of summer doldrums.

Bea Lillie, having missed a couple of "Inside U. S. A." performances, now has an understudy, Paula Laurence . . . That would be the toughest act to follow on Broadway should Bea find reason to leave the show.

Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur are working on a musical version of "Twentieth Century," which will have music by a young man from M-G-M's music department, working anonymously at it so far.

Despite there being a previous (unproduced) play called "April Fool," Groucho Marx and Norman Krasna said the heck with it and will continue to call their comedy by that title.

Joanna Roos, actress of the New York and London stage, will play the title role in George Bernard Shaw's "Candida," which is being produced by the Virginia Players at the University of Virginia for four nights beginning Wednesday

Tufts Has Long Run

Hollywood, July 24 (AP).—Actor Sonny Tufts once played right end for Yale (and got two bad knee injuries), but he has yet to make his longest football run.

For "Interference" he'll start his touchdown gallop at Wrigley Field here, where part of the picture is being filmed, but the bone-jarring tackle will take place on an RKO sound stage, several miles from the field, on the last day of production.

Pete's Having Trouble With His Accent

Hollywood, July 24 (AP).—"The trouble with you, Pete," Director John Ford told Pedro Armendariz, "is your accent. It isn't Mexican enough."

Whereupon Pedro got some intensive coaching for "The Three Godfathers."

Pedro was only born in Mexico City, and starred in pictures there long before he came to Hollywood. But he explains his "too good" English this way: The family lived in the United States for years. Pedro forgot Spanish while learning English. Then he forgot English while learning French when he lived with a relative who spoke nothing else. Back in Mexico, he had to reacquire Spanish, so he brushed up on English, too.

"And now," he complained, with an expressive wave of the hands, "I can't remember any French."

To Skate or to Act?

MICHAEL KIRBY will continue as Sonja Henie's skating partner in her ice show, but he'll have four months a year for film work. "Eventually, I want to give up skating for acting," says Kirby, who is now opposite Sonja in "Countess of Monte Cristo." "Acting pays more in the long run."

Final Week at the Watergate

At right, Gladys Swarthout and Luigi Lucioni examine the portrait of Miss Swarthout which will be exhibited for the first time at the Carnegie Institute this fall. Miss Swarthout sings at the Watergate on Friday. At left are three other artists who will appear at the Watergate this week: Top to bottom, Claudio Arrau, pianist, Wednesday; Ruth Diehl, soprano, and James Pease, Baritone, both singing tonight.

TODAY opens the final week of Watergate concerts. They have made July a memorable month, due largely to the inspired leadership of Howard Mitchell, and the consistently high level of artists featured with the summer orchestra.

The final week promises four soloists, some great music, and prospects for real excitement. Tonight a Tschaikowsky program, with soprano and baritone excerpts from the virile score of "Eugen Onegin." Ruth Diehl, heard in Washington in May in the Cathedral Choral Society's performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor, and James Pease, baritone, are the vocal soloists.

Pease has sung for several seasons at the Berkshire Festival, and appeared two seasons ago at the Watergate with notable success. Wednesday night the program is distributed among Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms, with Claudio Arrau playing the last of the five piano concertos of Beethoven, and the orchestra contributing the Brahms first symphony.

Closing night brings Gladys Swarthout, who last year drew the Watergate's largest audience, figured at 32,000. Swarthout will sing two arias, and four songs and then the encores will start.

MELVIN RITTER'S program at the National Gallery tonight includes two Washington premieres, the second concerto of the late Karol Szymanowski, and a song for muted violin by Edward Lewis. This will be the final National Gallery concert until September 12.

Phillips Gallery winds up its weekly concerts until September with tomorrow's piano playing by Willard Day, who lists an adult schedule to tax the biggest pianist. He's going to play the penultimate sonata of Beethoven, and Debussy's L'isle joyeuse. These two alone are a full night's work.

We commend Galbraith Choir for preparing an All-American program for Thursday evening. It is the last event in their year's series of programs. P. H.

Congress Is the 'Culprit' In Issuance of Stamps

By William M. Stuart

THE CHIEF criticism of collectors regarding new stamps seems to be the frequency of issue, the dates of which so often overlap. To this, even the cover dealer has a few objections to register. But there is nothing to be done about it except inform Congress that it is wiser to allow the Postoffice Department to use its own discretion in issuing stamps, for Congress is the main aggressor.

In a series of ordinary stamps issued in 1938 there were 32 different stamps—denominations one-half cent to five dollars. The first of the series was issued April 25, 1938, and the last denomination, that of the Coolidge five dollar variety, appeared November 17, 1938, while four other values appeared in December. The entire series was issued so that collectors were able to secure all items with little or no trouble and at first days there were few complaints.

Congress and the Postoffice Department should come to a thorough understanding concerning the issue of stamps, and thereby avoid conflict.

The schedule of new issues for release during July and August is as follows: July 19, Seneca Falls, N. Y., 3-cent, 100 years of Progress of American Women; July 31, Emporia, Kansas, 3-cent, William Allen White; July 31, New York, N. Y., 5-cent air mail Jubilee of Greater New York; August 2, Niagara Falls, N. Y., 3-cent centenary United States and Canada Peace; August 9, Frederick, Md., 3-cent Francis Scott Key; August 11, Washington, D. C., 3-cent "Salute to Youth" and August 14, Oregon City, Oreg., 3-cent Oregon Territory Centennial.

Romania has a new series which can be classed as a propaganda issue. This set is dedicated to the friendship between Russia and Romania. The stamps: 8 plus 8 lei red; 10 plus 10 lei olive, and 12 plus 12 lei brown.

AIR MAIL SERVICE will be inaugurated on a new route AM-93 between Phoenix, Prescott, Flagstaff and Winslow, Ariz., on August 1, and a special cachet will be applied on all covers.

Air mail service will be inaugurated on August 15 on route AM-94, between New York, N. Y., Newark, N. J., Middletown, Binghamton, Oneonta, Albany, Elmira-Corning, Ithaca, Syracuse, Auburn, Geneva, Rochester, Batavia and Buffalo-Niagara Falls, N. Y. Special cachets will be provided.

Liberia has issued two new air mail stamps in honor of the opening of the first flight and inauguration of air mail service from Monrovia to the United States scheduled for July 26. The stamps are 25 and 50-cent denominations. The flight is via Liberian International Airways, Ltd.

Postmaster General Donaldson has authorized the issuance of a special commemorative postage stamp in connection with the 100th anniversary of the establishment of Fort Bliss, Tex. Details as to the denomination, size, date and place of first-day sale will be made public later.

THE WOODRIDGE STAMP CLUB has arranged meetings for August 2, 16 and 30, Monday evenings, at the Recreation Room, 1818 Rhode Island ave. ne. There will be no meeting on Labor Day.

At a recent meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., the speaker was S. Hyder, Third Secretary of the Embassy of Pakistan. He traced the history of Pakistan from its beginnings to the establishment of the new nation in August, 1947, and exhibited sheets of the four stamps commemorating the event. They are on sale at the philatelic agency just opened by the embassy at 2201 R st. nw.

At the meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., on Tuesday evening an auction was held, Henry Gabriel acting as auctioneer. E. P. Anderson, vice president, presided, Ellery Denison, president, being abroad this month on Government business. There will be a meeting of the Club Tuesday in Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st., nw.,

The Capital Precancel Club will meet tomorrow evening at Weeks Stamp Shop, 1229 New York ave. nw.

A book and stamp mart has opened at the Washington National Airport. The new concession will carry a line of stamps, covers and other philatelic material. It will be in charge of Samuel Yudkin, a well known Washington philatelist and cover dealer.

Posing Gave Swarthout 15 New Numbers

MOST BUSY people avoid posing for a portrait, believing that time so spent is boring and unrewarding—for a sitter rarely feels that an artist has done full justice to his or her remarkable qualities of character and beauty.

Gladys Swarthout, soloist at Friday night's final Watergate concert, found quite the contrary to be true during her sittings for a portrait which Luigi Lucioni recently completed.

Lucioni is an opera fan, and also a record collector. In his collections are records of all the great contemporary singers, as well as those of the past. Knowing Miss Swarthout's curiosity about music of all kinds, whenever a lull came, Lucioni would put on one of his choice records.

Since the creation of the portrait required about 25 sittings, averaging three hours each, there were many records played, and from them Miss Swarthout got 15 new songs and arias for her repertoire.

Of these she will sing "Io son l'umile ancella," from "Adriana Lecouvreur," by Cilea, for her first offering at the Friday concert.

contemporaries. In Europe's small, municipal opera theaters, many hundreds of singers get routines down pat, and are weeded out as they ascend the ladder to eventual fame.

In this country such possibilities are limited because of the scarcity of opera companies, and the costs of opera production.

It is laudable of the Lyric Opera Association to wish to help the younger singers in our country. But how is this help to be made tangible?

One Pasquetto is to sing Rhadames; Palumbo: Amonasro; Dubro: Amneris, Carmen, Maddalena, and Lola; Frazier: Rosina and Gilda; Roberts: the Duke of Mantua, and Cancelmo: Turiddu.

Upon examination, we find that Bette Dubro is an American contralto who made her way up via Spitalny's all-girl show, with which she sang as Gloria. George Roberts is a young GI, making his debut as the Duke in Rigoletto. By engaging young American singers such as these, who are vocally ready for opera, but need actual experience, the Lyric Opera Association places rising singers in its debt.

For it is in Lyric Opera Association that singers get what training they receive outside of our largest houses. By cutting their operatic teeth with smaller but professional companies, singers will learn those manners of vocalism and stage conduct which result in seasoned artists. Good work, Lyric Opera Association!

The Record Player

New Outfit Produces a Fine Waxing

KHATCHATURIAN: Violin Concerto. David Oistrakh with the Russian State Symphony Orchestra under Alexander Gauk. Mercury Classics, DM 10. $7.84.

Comes now a new entry into the list of recording companies putting out good stuff. Mercury, formed into a classical outlet, is run by David Hall (of Record Book fame), John Hammond, former head of Keynote Records, and an authority in the field, and Mitchell Miller, one of the country's top oboe players and a musician of great accomplishments.

Khatchaturian's violin concerto is a conglomeration of all the things you like about the popular Armenian composer, with fewer of the things you dislike than in much of his work. Thematically it is imitative, but well handled, so that you don't mind having heard the same things often before. The slow movement is seductive (if you are susceptible) and the finale has a lilt smacking of something French that I can't quite recall. Still, it's all very Russian, and well recorded.

Oistrakh is a sensational fiddler whose name must shortly become known in this country through personal contact. We cannot afford to remain unacquainted with such playing. It is musical, brilliant, and stands in line with Heifetz, while hinting at some of Szigeti's zest.

Lalo: Symphonie Espagnole. Yehudi Menuhin, violinist, with Colonne Orchestra under Jean Fournet. Victor 1207. $6.

Years ago Menuhin, still under the tutelage of Georges Enesco, recorded this work in its entirety. He has done so again, and again under a violinist-conductor, Jean Fournet. The custom in this country of omitting the third movement, for no good reason we know, has been followed in more recent recordings, including the sumptuous one by Milstein and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

For this and other reasons involving tone, style and general feeling for the Frenchiness of the work, we find this new Menuhin version tops. Excellent recording.

RAVEL: Concerto for piano and orchestra. Leonard Bernstein, pianist and conductor of Philharmonia Orchestra. Victor 1209. $4.75.

This is it! For years this concerto has been neglected in concert and on records. Lacking the astounding feature of the concerto for the left hand alone, this is nevertheless a virtuoso score from Ravel's jazzy phase. It has been a Bernstein triumph as long as he has played it, and a friend of mine who heard him do it in London recently, when this recording was made, said it absolutely floored the English audience.

It is a terrific performance, with a singing slow movement, and a finale to knock you off your chair. The Philharmonia Orchestra is in every way competent, and under Bernstein's double-barreled leadership comes through with a handsome job. Don't miss this album.

Schumann: Piano Concerto in A Minor. Rudolf Serkin with Philadelphia Orchestra under Ormandy. Columbia 734. $6.

Poetic beauty is the keynote of this work, and of this performance. Ormandy is always a sensitive accompanist, and here he turns every touching orchestral phrase to perfect account.

There are several ways of playing this tender music, and Serkin turns to a surprisingly gentle, affectionate vein. Yet he maintains a tempo which forbids undue sentiment and provides a solid skeleton to the whole. His phrasing in the first movement is some of the most intelligent and beautiful we have ever heard in this work. This is one of the rare releases of the year, the finest version of this beauty now available.

PAUL HUME.

Negro Opera Meet Opens August 1 At A.M.E. Church

The same week that sees a new opera company performing at the Watergate will bring Washington the National Negro Opera Meet and Exhibit.

Opening Sunday, August 1, with a mass meeting at Metropolitan A. M. E. Church, the program includes conferences, lectures, round table discussions, and concerts, all on opera. Culminating event of the meet is the music festival in Griffith Stadium, Saturday, August 7, for which Clark Griffith is donating the use of the stadium.

Mary Cardwell Dawson, president of the National Negro Opera Company, has arranged for displays of operatic materials, a talent contest whose winners will be given scholarships, and for various concerts during the week.

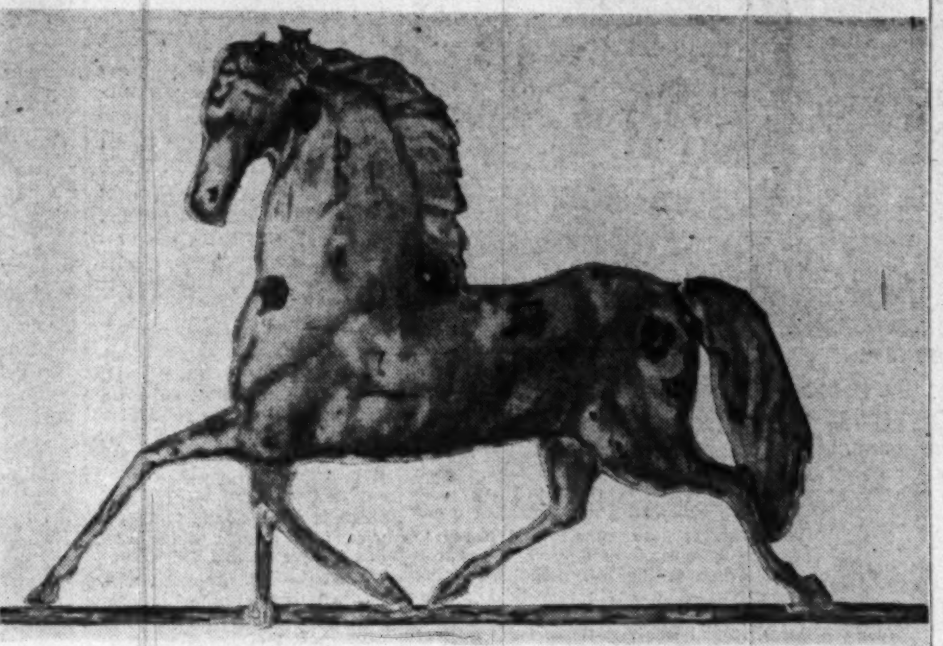
With Eye Deception in Design

They'll Fool You at National Gallery



Copper weather vane of the period around 1850, rendered by Dolores Haupt of Missouri, included in current exhibition by Index of American Design of National Gallery of Art.

By Jane Watson Crane

THE "eye-foolers" which abound in the index of American Design come to the fore once again in the exhibit of selections at the National Gallery. Obvious examples are the renderings of textiles, which fill most spectators with an irresistible impulse to reach out to touch them. The techniques of "trompe l'oeil" or eye deception have been used by artists for generations. Artists employed on the index project used them to make faithful hand-painted facsimiles of objects which were for the most part in everyday use in early America. Respect for the object was the keynote of this enterprise. Some of the artists who took this opportunity to weather the depression were clever and talented; and judging by the visual record, most of them were conscientious to a fault.

As the availability of Index material becomes better known, the National Gallery will be challenged with the need to expand staff, space and facilities. It is one thing to keep the 22,000 odd items (7000 photographs and the best renderings by artists) stored and filed as a record; another to get them used.

The index curator, E. O. Christensen, states that the aim is to get the material used as much as possible. While he claims nothing phenomenal about the growth of interest, "every year," he says, "we have more people coming." And this despite the fact that there has been no literature sent out, almost no publicity about the index since it became part of the National Gallery's collections.

Photos on Request

ON REQUEST, the Index staff will send out on loan photographs of items. On application, individuals may come to Index quarters in the gallery to go through the files, to study and copy material.

Requests at present come mainly from teachers, publications and industries. Use in this last category would, one surmises, be considerably more if the material were located in or close to an industrial center. Several traveling exhibitions of Index material have been made up. Two are, in fact, now being circulated by the American Federation of Arts, one of which was previously shown at the Honolulu Academy of Fine Arts. The Library of Congress here has frequently drawn items for inclusion in its exhibits commemorating State centennials.

Holger Cahill, as director of the Federal Art Project, was chief promulgator of this sprawling undertaking, which employed needy artists in all but 17 of the States. Ruth Reeves, textile designer, has claims to have been originator of the idea. The project was executed by State authorities, and in the case of the 17 with unexploited design resources, the assumption is that these States had no unemployed artists, or in any event none were admitted as such.

Contemporary Use

IN THE National Gallery exhibit there is one case devoted to examples of contemporary use of the material. In this rather meager assemblage may be seen greeting cards with Pennsylvania German motifs, a stationery box put out by a commercial company, playing cards, a box with Spanish southwest motifs, and examples of how Index material may be adapted for home crafts, through needlework design.

On the walls surrounding the case are items in various categories. At the farthest end of the gallery are renderings of period furniture, of the sort familiar to antique hounds. Kitchen utensils are grouped in another section, where stone jugs and copper pots make the handsomest showing. Period costumes are seen, as well as some of the justly famed textiles. The decorative arts of the Pennsylvania Germans are featured, and the religious wood carvings and panel paintings of the Southwest, stemming from Spanish Colonial origins, most of them copied from exhibits in the Taylor Museum at Colorado Springs. There are such oddities as an Adam and Eve wood carving in pine by an artisan named Schmid, bandbox designs and tavern signs. There are renderings of early wallpaper. A nineteenth century design in mauve on buff depicts the Mexican War.

Christensen, the curator, is at work now on a cross section of the Index to be published in book form by MacMillan, with introduction by Holger Cahill and text by himself.

Lotte Lehmann Writes Of Her 'Many Lives'

Among contemporary singers, Lotte Lehmann has one of the largest followings. She devotes her efforts now to lieder recitals and to teaching, appearing only occasionally in opera. Yet her fans remember her best in the great operatic roles, such as the Marchallin in "Rosenkavalier" as Elsa in "Lohengrin" or Elizabeth in "Tannhauser."

Miss Lehmann tells of her great operatic experiences in a semiautobiography, My Many Lives (Boosey & Hawkes, $3.75). In it she takes the reader behind the scenes of the opera and gives an insight into what makes an opera singer click. It is fascinating reading for any lover of opera.

New Display Now Up at Market City

WASHINGTON'S Center Market, which initiated the idea of mingling art objects with meat and produce by holding an exhibit from the Corcoran Art School, has another show, this time of sculptured glass and ceramics.

The glass is the work of Willis Lowry, a craftsman who has already won recognition here and abroad. The ceramics are from the Winthrop Studios of Washington. They comprise an exhibit of over 150 pieces by about 30 craftsmen. During the course of the show individuals will make technical demonstrations of their work, between 2 and 6 p. m. Fridays and Saturdays.

This will be Lowry's first and last show here, at least for some time. He has accepted an offer from his church to become a missionary in India and is to leave in September.

The art division of the Public Library will show selections from its own portfolios of art reproductions during August.

Continuing at the Barnet Aden Gallery, 127 Randolph pl. nw., is a group show of paintings.

In the Kensington, Md., Library is a summer show of work by members of the local sketch group.

A poster contest with prizes totaling $4000 has been announced for professional artists in the 58 member countries of the United Nations. Goal is to find a 1948 official U. N. poster. Details may be obtained from the American Association for the United Nations, 45 E. 65th st., New York 21, N. Y. First prize is $1500; second, $1000; third, $500. Ten honorable mentions will receive $100 each.

'Who Said That?' Hits Bullseye

TROUT

RUARK

By John Crosby

AS a man who normally finds quiz shows an incomprehensible form of amusement, I was pleasantly astounded to discover myself enjoying a new one called "Who Said That?" (WRC-NBC, 8:30 p. m., Fridays), which has some of the wit and charm of "Information, Please."

The entertainment value of a quiz show rests entirely on the asides and the personalities of the guests and the permanent residents and not at all on the largely negligible information it provides.

The other night "Who Said That?" presented a permanent staff consisting of quizmaster Bob Trout and John Cameron Swayze, both of NBC's news staff, and a guest staff composed of Robert Ruark, the columnist; Mary Margaret McBride and H. V. Kaltenborn—easily one of the most unlikely groupings of people in my memory.

If it were at all feasible, and it probably isn't, I'd like to see the same staff kept on. They proved unexpectedly harmonious. Some surprising chinks in the personalities of Kaltenborn and Miss McBride came to light. Both of them displayed sparks of humor that would surprise and possibly shock their regular fans. Miss McBride's contributions occasionally approached the waspish, which in light of Miss McBride's normal activities might frighten her adherents clear over to the Columbia Broadcasting System. As for the rest of them, an air of intelligence hovered over their remarks, an unusual and probably illegal phenomenon in quiz shows.

Very Few Misses

THE idea behind "Who Said That?" is simple. Trout supplies a quotation said by some reasonably prominent person within the last seven days. The experts supply the name of the author. This is one of those turnabout quiz shows, incidentally. If no one knows the answer, all the experts cough up $5. Since all of them are in some way connected with the news business, this team of four didn't miss often.

Here are a few of the quotes they handled successfully: "You can talk from now till doomsday and men won't listen"—by Helen Gahagan Douglas. "Truman is a gone goose"—a rather easy one by Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce. "Wallace is Stalin's Mortimer Snerd" also attributed to Clare Boothe Luce, though I think Westbrook Pegler said it first. (Its authorship isn't really worth fighting over.)

The experts were stumped and forced to pay five bucks for the following: "The President's action is the last gasp of a dying Administration" (Senator Vandenberg's comment on Mr. Truman's special session of Congress), and "I wouldn't throw fresh eggs at Taft," a remark made by the President during his Western tour.

One quote rather puzzled me. As closely as I could get it down, it went: "I ain't a-runnin' for anything, I never was a-runnin' and I aint a-goin' to run." That was attributed to Justice William O. Douglas, which rather surprises me. In the papers I read, Justice Douglas took himself out of the Democratic race in more orthodox English and it seems odd that a man of his stripe should leap into Ozarkian dialect on this issue. Maybe I read the wrong newspapers.

Rapid Byplay

BESIDES furnishing the right answers, this team provided a good deal of brisk and amusing comment on the quotes and on their authors. Right here I'd like to state that I hold no brief for these quotations. Our political wit, it seems to me, is at low tide when a show of this kind has to dredge up such a remark as "I could be jailed for what I think of the Eightieth Congress" (William Green). Sharper remarks than that are made every half hour at Bleeck's saloon.

In addition to new quotations, there is one all-time quote which in this case was fielded nicely by H. V. Kaltenborn. Kaltenborn thus redeemed an earlier, explosive error in which he delivered a long, literate discourse on the background of a certain quote and the events leading up to it—all of it lucid, convincing and beautifully presented.

After he finished, Trout took a deep breath and remarked gently: "Mr. Kaltenborn, that was such a magnificent commentary that I hate to say it was entirely wrong."

Bracken Picks Pockets, But Calls It a Hobby

By Bob Thomas

HOLLYWOOD, July 24 (AP).—The screwiest hobby here is Eddie Bracken's. He picks pockets. At a party as a gag, he swiped watches off the wrists of Dana Andrews, Burt Lancaster, Eddie Albert and three lawyer friends as they dined with their wives about a large table. "What time is it?" Eddie asked as he rose to leave their group. All six victims looked at their bare wrists—as Bracken hauled their timepieces out of his pocket.

A Leavenworth prison chaplain visited the set of "The Girl From Jones Beach," and Eddie lifted his watch. "That hasn't happened to me in four years at the prison," the cleric grinned as Eddie handed back the ticker. A city cop watching a sequence being filmed on a Beverly Hills street was handed his wallet by Eddie before realizing it was gone. Eddie filched my notes from my side pocket while confessing these all-in-fun transgressions.

"It started on 'Hold That Blonde' two years ago," Eddie said. "I played a kleptomaniac, and they had a professional—a guy who did it in a vaudeville act—teach me how to pick pockets. Shoving a guy in a crowd to distract his attention, slitting a pocket with a razor blade—stuff like that." Eddie took it from there and made pilfering from the person his standing gag—his hobby—though it's hardly necessary to add that victims promptly get their possessions back. Nobody's been sore yet.

Eddie lifts a wristwatch by diverting the owner's attention with a coin trick. He laid a half-dollar in my left palm with heads up, closed my fingers over it, transferred the coin to my right palm and asked, "Now which side is up?" Meanwhile, his fingers were fumbling with the catch on my watch-band—a particularly hard-to-open double-clasp variety, I was glad to hear Eddie say. Anyway, I was on guard for him.

Thanks to his hobby, Bracken is probably the most pickpocket-proof guy in Hollywood. But another, unhappier dividend is that he is immediately suspected when anything is missing.

The property man missed his ring and didn't discover until he got home that he had left it on the basin while washing his hands that morning. All day he had blamed the loss on "that Bracken so-and-so." Eddie just looked innocent—and I doubt that any man can look more innocent than an unjustly accused Eddie Bracken.

Kodaly to Visit England

Zoltan Kodaly, Hungarian composer, will emerge from his native countrty this summer for a visit to England. He will conduct a program of his own works at a Promenade Concert in London on August 29. At the Three Choirs festival in Worcester in September he will conduct his Missa Brevis, the first performance of the work with orchestra.

Leonard Warren, Metropolitan Opera baritone, is scheduled for six leading roles at La Scala in Milan in August. He will be the first American-born member of the Metropolitan to appear at La Scala since the end of the war. Warren will be back in the fall to sing with the San Francisco Opera, the Metropolitan and on a recital tour of the United States and Canada.

Barber Takes Great Care Not to Swear

ONE of the things broadcasters live in constant fear of is that someone in an unguarded moment will let out an off-color remark near a live micraphone. Announcers and commentators always are on guard whenever they're near a live microphone. But the worry was too much for Walter Lanier (Red) Barber, sports director for C. B. S., whose stock in trade is his spontaneous, informal sports commentary. Red swore off swearing some years back.

Barber, who also broadcasts Brooklyn Dodgers games over Station WHN in New York, says:

"When you're sitting in front of a microphone broadcasting an exciting baseball or football game, you say what comes to the tip of your tongue. If you're accustomed to using a bit of profanity now and then when you're away from the microphone, it's mighty hard not to slip while you're on the air—and that's one of the worst things that could happen in radio."

'Better Buys'

JAMES H. CARMINE, vice president of Philco, says that despite the relatively high price of television sets, they actually represent a better buy from the consumer's standpoint than radio sets. That's because, he says, the profit margin on television is smaller—on a percentage basis—from the manufacturer right down the line.

But Carmine says the manufacturer, distributor and retailer still are doing all right because of the larger dollar volume on the sale of a television set—and the quick turnover.

'Lose Your Shirt'

STATION WNEW of New York launched on July 19 another of its giveaway-in-reverse programs. It's to be called "lose your shirt." The studio contestant must pay if he misses a question. That money, plus the master of ceremony's salary for the show and the amount the station receives from the sponsor goes to charity.

MARTIN CODEL'S television digest lists 30 televisions on the air, construction permits granted for 78 more, and 285 applications pending. This compares with its April 1 survey showing 23 stations on the air, 78 construction permits, and 183 applications pending . . . Benjamin Abrams, president of Emerson, says rising costs may cause an increase in radio prices this year but lower television prices still are possible because of improving manufacturing techniques.

New Radio Set Operates Without Tubes

NEW YORK, July 24 (AP).—A new kind of radio set, whose music begins instantly when the set is turned on, is being shown by the Bell Telephone laboratories.

This set has no vacuum tubes. Nothing lights, nothing even glows, and nothing gets warm. The set always goes instantly because the usual warming up of tubes does not exist.

The invention that replaces tubes is a tiny metal cylinder. Although this cylinder acts like a radio tube there is so vacuum, no grid, no plate, no glass to keep the air away.

The entire innards of the new tube are merely two hair-thin wires that run down to the base of an empty tube, to stand on a bit of metal not much larger than the head of a pin.

This piece of metal is the secret. The metal amplifies the current that one wire carries to it, and the other wire carries away the amplified current.

The power used today was less than that of an ordinary flashlight battery. The new tube is called a transitor. It is not on the market.

The inventors are Drs. John Bardeen and Walter H. Brattain, working under direction of Dr. William Shockley.

Williams' 'Streetcar' Captures Triple Crown of the Theater

NEW YORK, July 24 (AP).—"A Streetcar Named Desire" this week won the last leg on the triple crown of the theater, the Donaldson award, given annually to the best play of the season.

WILLIAMS

The first two legs on the crown are the Pulitzer prize and the New York Drama Critics Circle award, which the Tennessee Williams drama received earlier. The Donaldson award, however, is slightly different from the other prizes, as it represents the choice of all workers in the Broadway legitimate theater. It is the nearest thing stage folk have to the Motion Picture Academy award "Oscars."

The Donaldson awards are given every year by Billboard magazine. They are distributed in honor of the late founder of Billboard, William H. Donaldson, who was a theatrical enthusiast. The awards are made after all workers in the theater—from producers, theater owners, actors, directors down to the veriest doormen and usher—are polled.

This year, of course, the best play prize went to Tennessee Williams for his "A Streetcar Named Desire." It was the second triumph for Williams, his "Glass Menagerie" having won the 1944-45 season's laurel. (Other winners in the five-year history of the award were: 1943-44, "Voice of the Turtle;" 1945-46, "State of the Union;" 1946-47, "All My Sons.")

Paul Kelly, whose superb performance in "Command Decision" brought him stardom for the first time in his 40-odd years in the theater, was named the season's best actor. Judith Anderson, whose thespic acrobatics in "Medea" won critical acclaim, was the choice of the stage community as "best actress" of the 1947-48 season.

Elia Kazan, who won last year's Donaldson nod for his staging of "All My Sons," also was this year's choice. Kazan also was the choice of the motion picture people for this year's directing "Oscar," for "Gentleman's Agreement."

"Mister Roberts" was named "Best First Play."

"High Button Shoes" was the overwhelming choice as best musical of the year, although Oscar Hammerstein, 2d, was given gold gadgets for his libretto and lyrics in "Allegro," and Richard Rodgers for his music in the same Theater Guild production.

Four other musicals won reflected glory via individual achievements:

Paul Hartman was voted "best actor in a musical," for his cavorting in "Angel in the Wings;" Valerie Bettis harvested a brace of prizes as a result of her enthusiastically acclaim dancing in "Inside U. S. A.," namely, "best feminine musical debut," and "best danseuse." Sid Caesar's comicality in "Make Mine Manhattan" gave him a plurality in the voting for "best male debut performance in a musical." Harold Lang of "Look Ma, I'm Dancing" was adjudged "best dancer of the season."

Films Used As 'Bridge' On TV Show

TELEVISION shows usually are all live or all film, but a combination was used to good effect in the Lanny Ross show on NBC Thursday night. Films shot ahead of time were used for transitions from one studio set to another—and to bring in outdoor scenes.

The setting was an amusement park. Two outdoor film sequences made in advance showed Ross and Peggy Ellis riding through the tunnel of love and on a roller coaster. To get all the needed shots, they had to go through the tunnel of love three times and on the roller coaster twice.

"I liked the tunnel of love best," Ross said afterward.

"The roller coaster made my stomach do flip-flops," hastily explained Ross, who is happily married—and whose wife was sitting nearby.

Ross says he prefers live productions for television, but likes the use of films to add outdoors scenes.

WEAM to Become Full Time Station

Station WEAM in Arlington yesterday was given permission by the Federal Communications Commission to change from daytime broadcasting to unlimited hours and to increase its power from 1000 to 5000 watts.

Construction work on the station's four towers and transmitter site will begin immediately and WEAM expects to broadcast on a fulltime basis shortly. Owners are Mr. and Mrs. Harold H. Thoms of Asheville, N. C.

General manager is Howard Stanley, formerly with CBS in New York.

Helpmates

William C. Gittinger, CBS vice president in charge of sales, says radio and television "will grow in a complementary way—not as competitors." Gittinger told officials of CBS affiliates at a New York meeting that standard radio broadcasting "will provide the dollar sinews to finance the early operations and expenses of television."

Sweden Acts To Revamp School Setup

By Fred M. Hechinger

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (by air mail).—For many years Sweden's educational and cultural direction pointed toward Germany. Political observers often look for economic and "racial" reasons why so much of Swedish life has been oriented along a Hamburg-Berlin parallel; but they are, I believe, on the wrong track. It is Sweden's traditional school system which has long been running according to the German pattern.

The main points of similarity are overemphasis on the academic side; extreme examination-consciousness; a certain amount of rigidity, and a selective "caste" setup which favors the "academic class."

Fortunately, Sweden has a strong backbone of fundamental democracy, supported and kept flexible by the Scandinavian tradition of town-hall and grass-root cooperation. While the caste system rose to the top in Germany and set up a long succession of master-mind dictatorships, the social consciousness of a free and progressive nation remained the dominant force in Sweden.

Decided to Revise

AS A RESULT this country recognized the danger signal. About eight years ago Sweden decided to revise its educational system along lines which would guarantee and support one of the world's greatest democracies. And quite logically, the political parties and the government agencies turned to the reform of the public schools.

A few weeks ago the reform plan has been reported out of committee. It will now go out to the nation, will be debated and discussed in every town and village throughout the country, and will be returned to Parliament for final action early next year.

That is the Swedish way of doing things. Swedes feel that the reorganization of the schools is so far-reaching and decisive a step that it should be prepared with all the care due the generations of the future.

Age Limit Raised

UNDER the new plan the compulsory school attendance will be raised from seven to nine years. There will be one type of school for everybody, regardless of social or economic background. Only after the required nine years—six of elementary and three of secondary school—may Swedish youngsters elect to go on to the academic gymnasium in preparation for a university career. But by that time the barriers of tradition will have been broken down by the emancipating force of talents and education.

"At the same time," a leading educator told me, "our new uniform school will avoid some of the American errors. It will be 'graded' according to every student's personal potential. We don't want to level our children to an equality of mediocre standards. We expect to raise them to that equality of opportunity which gives the best to the best—and demands the same in return."

Accordingly, the new Swedish school is to be "individualized." While there will be a basic course, required of all pupils, every boy and girl will be made to add as many "supplementary" subjects as possible. The limit of achievement is to be set by every youngster's ability to absorb rather than by a prescribed curriculum.

An indication of the new orientation of Swedish life is the fact that English will be the major foreign language. It will be offered to all students in their fifth year. During the seventh and eighth years a number of free electives will be added, pretty much along the lines of the American college plan.

Some Statistics

THAT there is a desperate need for the reform plan is borne out by these statistics: While approximately 100,000 Swedish children enter school every year, the annual university enrollment is only about 3000. In other words, only little over 3 per cent of the Swedish population have in the past been able to take part in formal, higher education.

Perhaps even more significant is the fact that of all university students only about 5 per cent come from the working population while the peasants' share is even lower.

All this is not nearly as serious an indictment of Swedish educational traditions as it might seem to be. Educators here agree with politicians of nearly all parties that the public school system must be put on a truly democratic basis, too. Quite aside from all ideological questions, Sweden needs about three times as many academically trained people than are available now. To attract students who are not in the financial position to foot the bill for a moderately expensive university career the government now offers loans which are payable within 15 years after receipt. "Our students prefer to feel that they are paying their own way. They don't like to think of these grants in terms of charity," I was told.

Along with the liberalization of the school the old-established and rather cruel examination system will undergo a severe "devaluation." In its stead Sweden proposes to rely on a progressively trained teacher, fortified with child psychology and a new outlook.

College Diploma Looks Different These Days

New York Herald Tribune Service.

NEW YORK, July 24.—Students graduated this year have found that diplomas aren't what they used to be. They are just as hard to earn as ever; but they are half the size they were a generation ago, and have lost their Latin touch.

So says Walter E. Dunn, manager of the diploma department of Ames & Rollinson, an engrossing firm that makes 35,000 diplomas a year for universities, colleges and schools. Dunn has been with the company 60 years, and knows what he is talking about.

Dunn says, "A diploma probably means as much to the student today as it always has. But the one he gets now is only half as large as his father's, and only a fourth as big as the one his grandfather hung on the wall.

"When I entered this business, the standard college diploma was 19 by 24 inches. Today, 6 by 8 inches is the popular size. We even do some as small as 3 by 5 inches for some commercial schools and hospitals."

Years ago it was the vogue for all professors and instructors to sign the college diploma for every graduate, Dunn recalled, and this made large diplomas necessary. Now only the president of the college and the president of the board of trustees sign, as a rule.

Diplomas are still called "sheepskins" in many quarters, although they are often engraved on paper resembling parchment instead of on skins imported from England. The genuine article is preferred by the better universities, colleges and private schools, Dunn said. "Real parchment made from skins is more durable than any substitute; any attempt to erase or change the diploma shows up immediately because it takes off the finish and leaves a spot like suede or reverse calf. Therefore, any forgery is plainly visible.

"Sometimes people complain to their colleges that their diplomas have withered or shrunk. We always explain that this is the mark of real sheepskin; vellum paper and imitation parchment always lie flat. But sheepskin has one disadvantage—it is appetizing to rats and mice. Every so often an institution will order a duplicate to replace a half-eaten diploma."

Such orders are filled only if they come through the school that originally issued the diploma, because attempts have been made to obtain "copies" by people who never were graduated.

"One man brought in his daughter and explained that he wanted to buy her a good diploma," Dunn said. "All the other girls in her set had them, so she wanted one, too. He was crestfallen, and she cried, when I told them diplomas were not for sale, but have to be ordered through the institutions that confer them."

Off-Campus Units at Temple

PHILADELPHIA.—Temple University will continue to operate off-campus undergraduate units during the 1948-'49 academic.

One of the centers, located at Havertown, Pa., takes care of students residing in the suburban area west and southwest of the city; the other, Cedarbrook, which is situated in the northwestern part of Philadelphia, 10 miles from the main campus, will continue to handle the bulk of the freshman and sophomore students.

Job Scarcity Is Forecast For Students

Tulsa, Okla., July 24 (AP).—Planning on changing jobs?

Dr. George D. Small of the University of Tulsa says now is the time to make the move.

Here's how he explains it:

"Within the next two graduation periods the employment market will be flooded with more competent potential employes than at any time in history. A large number of veterans attending college under the GI Bill will be graduated—many of them mature men—and they will make competition tough."

GEORGE D. SMALL

Dr Small, dean of admissions and veterans' coordinator at TU, reached that conclusion after analyzing 967 job opportunities for 1947 to 1955.

His report predicts the end of the country doctor era, and the disappearance of days when young lawyers will hang their shingles in their favorite small town and become the village leader.

That he says, is because of the trend towards specialization and the migration from rural to urban communities.

Dr. Small says specialization is the key to jobs of the future.

The survey shows that good opportunities for this year's college graduation class are good.

"But," Dr. Small warns, "it will be difficult for students finishing high school this year to obtain good jobs when they graduate from college unless they survey the predicted job market and prepare themselves accordingly.

"The employment saturation point in cities is fast-approaching," Dr. Small says.

Dr. Small contends there are some 30,000 different ways to earn money, but the average persons knows of only about 25. Most of those "difficult ways" are in specialized fields.

He expects the law profession to "close out" in two or three years. He advises a person studying law to go a step further and prepare himself for, say, labor relations.

The survey shows that what the experts call "normal replacements" will offer opportunities in many fields.

"For example," Dr. Small says, "some 3000 to 4000 doctors die each year, and their places must be filled."

Fields which are "tight"—offering generally only normal replacements—include railroad, aeronautical, watch-making, radio repairing, and journalism.

"Open" fields include leatherworking, the ministry, lumber, sales and mathematics.

"And if you can tune a piano," Dr. Emall says, "hold on to that tuning fork. The survey shows opportunities for piano tuners—because of the lack of competition—still will be above average in 1955."

Emergency Educational Centers

Stopgap Units Give Vets Break

By David Taylor Marke

NEW YORK, July 24 (AP).—Veterans enrolled in emergency educational centers are getting the breaks in higher education today.

A check by the Associated Press shows that veterans applying for admission to the sophomore and junior years in regular colleges are receiving priority consideration.

The emergency centers were established to help ease the burden on college enrollments caused by the Servicemen's Readjustment Act. Designed to supply the first two years of college work, they are offshoots of established universities and State and local boards of education.

Such centers as the University of Massachusetts at Fort Devens, Charlotte College Center of the University of North Carolina and the Chicago and Galesburg undergraduate divisions of the University of Illinois report that students from these centers already are in good standing in their universities. Places are kept open for them. On completion of their work, they move up to the main campuses.

Little Difficulty

DEAN HUGH G. PRICE of the Montgomery junior college, Bethesda, Md., conducted by the Montgomery County board of education, reports that "we have not experienced any particular difficulty in placing our 'transfer' graduates for the junior year of a four-year college or university if their grades and course selections have met the standards of the institutions to which they apply.'

The association colleges of upper New York, consisting of Champlain, Mohawk and Sampson Colleges, already have placed 70 per cent of 2000 students eligible for transfer, according to Dr. Asa S. Knowles, president.

The 23 public junior colleges in Iowa had no difficulty in placing the students for their third and fourth years, says J. P. Street, director of public junior colleges in Iowa.

Every center reporting said it had received the utmost cooperation from the liberal arts and business administration colleges.

The professional schools, whenever possible, have been equally cooperative.

Plan to Continue

DO THESE emergency centers plan to continue? Yes, as long as the demand exists. But their enrollments are gradually decreasing and a number have consolidated facilities and abandoned others.

President George D. Stoddard, University of Illinois, says that whether the Chicago and Galesburg divisions will continue beyond the five-year commitment period "depends upon student demands for education, legislative appropriations, and the terms of the initial contract."

In Philadelphia, the Pennsylvania Area College Centers plan to continue, but the three colleges will be merged into one.

The Charlotte college center of the University of North Carolina hopes to continue beyond 1948-49. If the university abandons the center, it is hoped that the citizens of Mecklenburg County and Charlotte will sponsor a permanent institution.

All but two of Iowa's public junior colleges plan to continue.

Montgomery Junior College, says Dean Price, is now an "integral, permanent part of the Montgomery educational program."

Dude in the Sun

Ever Consider a Ranch?

Scene at the Last Frontier Hotel, dude ranch hostelry in Las Vegas, Nev.

By Walter W. Hubbard

IF THERE'S a tendency around your home to call some members of the family "poddnuh," practice making lasso loops with the clothesline, and refer to the dinette as the "chuck wagon"—start sending for folders from the dude ranches, for that's where you're going to wind up this summer or early autumn.

There still remains a great American frontier where one may capture some of the romance, charm and adventure of the early West, and where living on a ranch affords recreation and rest.

There are "dude ranches" in the majority of States in the Union. You may even find one within a short train ride of the largest city in the world, but at the moment we are referring to those located in the seven States where the greatest appeal is made to the summer and fall visitor—in alphabetical order, Arizona, California, Colorado, Montana, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming.

Two Major Classes

FOR THE sake of clarity let us not confuse those ultra-swank "desert lodges" which get up to $200 per person and which have no equal in elegance of service, appointments, accommodations and cuisine, with the run of the mill ranch on which the average, middle class Washingtonian might enjoy a week or a month without feeling that he was going in hock for the next 12 months.

The term "dude ranch" has been used to embrace two major classes of ranch life, blinding us to the major differences which should be learned before boarding your train or getting behind the wheel of your car.

They can best be defined, according to American Automobile Association road reporters who have recently made a study of them, as either "Operating Ranches" or "Guest Ranches." The Hollywood version of the dude ranch, with regiments of eligible cowboys on hand to lend allure and "excitement," is all but nonexistent. The closest approach to this pattern would be the operating ranch with guest accommodations.

In making reservations at ranches, whether through the AAA or any legitimate travel agency, every effort should be made to determine the particular type of ranch you, as a prospective "dude" would enjoy. Obviously, for example, you wouldn't want to go to a ranch where the operators actually loathed the girls who appear in high heels and fancy hats and whose first question, after arrival is:

"What DO we do for excitement?"

You Work a Little

AN OPERATING ranch is what its name implies—a ranch that is really in the beef-on-the-hoof business, with all the allied trappings, and, in addition, a few units for the housing of guests. The cabins or rooms in the ranch house are apt to be on the rough side—comfortable, but purposefully rough. Meals are nearly always dished out in the ranch house "family style," at long tables with benches.

Day to day activities on an operating ranch generally constitute observation of how a real ranch is run, plus scheduled pack trips over night or for several days. You're usually expected to be up with the chickens and doing at least a certain amount of work or chores, and, of course, the rates are lower than on a ranch where you don't lift a finger to help with the work. This type of ranch sometimes calls for strenuous though not backbreaking activity—light toil which doesn't always make for a light appetite.

These ranches in Arizona, California, Colorado, Montana, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming have, as a rule, something in common regardless of whether you're to be a participant or a spectator, and regardless of their weekly rates. They have horses, good food and plenty of it, and an almost unlimited opportunity to be out of doors nearly every waking hour.

Ranch Resorts

NOW THE other type which often comes under the general classification of a "dude ranch" is actually a guest ranch, or a ranch resort, as different from the operating ranch. This type isn't in the cow business for money, and consequently accommodations are usually more modern in type aimed to suit those whose ideas of "roughing it" include a combination tub and shower.

This type of ranch will generally have its own string of saddle mounts—and slightly more expensive horses, corrals, barns and the like. There will be a little more "polish" and "front" in the main lodge building. Activities will be more or less "manufactured" and the tendency is always to wait on the whims of the guest. Hands are hired who can strum mandolins or guitars and whose repertoires include a lot more than just "Home on the Range."

Most of the ranches stage dances at some time or other, but these guest ranches will hire three-piece orchestras on occasions, and a number of them have rather elaborate cocktail bars with a generous sprinkling of wicker furniture with its inseparable chintz-covered cushions, scattered carelessly over hardwood floors. It may cost you from $45 to $80 a week for either type.

Gold Found in Siam

Bangkok, Siam (AP).—Gold has been discovered near the Siam-Burma frontier by a 20-year-old Siamese. The youth was hunting in the Kanchanaburi jungles. He saw some yellow metal glinting out of the slime of a pool. He scooped up as much of the metal as he could carry and brought it to Bangkok. The Department of Mines confirmed it was gold. It withheld the youth's name until he can get back to the jungle and stake a claim.

Genesee Flows Modestly, Then Raises Cain

ALBANY, N. Y., July 24.—For most of its journey from its source to Lake Ontario, the Genesee River flows modestly. But twice it throws caution to the winds, once in the Wyoming hills, where its gorge has 600-foot-high banks, and again as it nears the end of its course, where it provides Rochester with three waterfalls.

The beauties of the Genesee gorge have been preserved by the State in 10,600-acre Letchworth State Park, extending 17 miles from Portageville to Mount Morris Highbanks. Within the park the river forms three waterfalls, dropping over 300 feet into the canyon, which extends northward for more than 12 miles.

Near Middle Falls stands the Seneca Council House, a typical Iroquois "long house," and just beyond is a statue to Mary Jemison, "White Woman of the Genesee" who was captured by the Indians in 1755 at the age of 15 and who died in 1835.

The Lower Lakes Archers Federation ran off its target Archery Championship Tournament in the Park, July 17 and 18. The Federation's Team Championship Tournament will be held at Rochester, August 1.

Lake Ontario will be the scene of the longest fresh-water sailing race, 335 miles, August 29. Cruising boats will start from the Rochester Yacht Club, sail to Stony Island, then to Toronto and return. Earlier in the month, from August 19 to 22, the Rochester Yacht Club will sponsor the international 14-foot dinghy championship regatta on Lake Ontario.

Western New York State's only harness racing track—Batavia Downs—will be open from August 9 to October 30, with daily races sponsored by the Genesee-Monroe Racing Association.

Easy to Be Winner

Atlantic Beach, N. C.—It's easy to be a beauty winner here. Ten weekly contests, called "Showcase of Beauty," will be held during the season, with contestants, picked at random from the sand. Weekly winners will be eligible for $1000 in prizes in a finale late in the season.

National Airlines Opens New Ticket Office on K Street

National Airlines has opened a ticket office at 1625 K st. in the Commonwealth Building, District Manager Parke Wright said yesterday.

Wright said National is now flying seven flights daily out of Washington—four trips to New York and three flights south.

The southern flights include:

A DC-6 flight to Havana that goes nonstop to Tampa and then nonstop to Havana.

A DC-6 flight to Miami that goes nonstop to Jacksonville and then nonstop to Miami.

A daily flight to New Orleans, which stops en route at Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Jacksonville, Tallahassee and Pensacola.

A six-day cruise to Bermuda over the Labor Day weekend by the Holland-America liner Veendam has been announced. The Veendam will sail at noon on Wednesday, September 1, and will return to New York late the following Thursday.

Smallest State Park

The smallest State park in the United States covers only 25 square feet along U. S. Highway 50 at Government Camp on the slopes of Mount Hood. It was set aside to preserve a monument erected to the memory of Sam Barlow, who built the first road around Mount Hood for covered wagons a century

Whistle Stopping

Our Man Samples Life at Rehoboth

By Orval Hopkins

REHOBOTH, Del., July 24.—The local cops and some visiting jellyfish made determined bids for free publicity here recently and far be it from this bureau not to take the bait. The law got its hook out with the roundup of a lost boy which surely must have set a record for dispatch. The lad's father, who happens to be a friend of mine, walked into the police station and had scarcely time to yell, "Lost muh boy!" when the desk sergeant, who was on the phone at the time, spoke the lad's name. He was on the other end of the wire . . . The jellyfish, which chose this week to invade the beach in impressive numbers, made the water virtually insupportable except for some young and muscular parties who bravely caught the invertebrates and buried them in the sand . . . Henlopen Playhouse, bustling little summer theater on the grounds of the Henlopen Hotel, has just completed a run of Ann Corio in "Separate Rooms" and is opening this week with Neil Hamilton in "Blithe Spirit." Speaking of the thettah, Alice Gundrey, who handles the headache department at the Corner Cupboard Inn here, bears a resemblance to Edith Gresham, the Aunt Eller of "Oklahoma!" now at the National in our Capital . . . The local paper, a weekly named "The Public Press," which I once looked at rather loftily, proves to be an organ of bright news and coltish vitality, if not one of culture and sophistication. By this sledge-hammer innuendo I mean that I failed to find in the paper the present status of the Rehoboth ball team in the Eastern Shore League, of which it is a member. The Rehoboths may be at "the top of the heap," as we say, or they may be bogged in the cellar," as I believe we also say . . . I tried, by the way, one of those gadgets on the boardwalk where a ball comes up at you and you try to bat it. Taking a stance up there like Cecil Travis (I bat from the wrong side, too) I hit a soggy .178 or so . . . And with the children watching, too . . . Well, to other things, for lo, dawn, which.

A TRIP TO LONDON from Paris has been tacked on to its Washington-Paris schedule at no additional price by Trans World Airline, and TWA is rather stubbornly calling it a "new lower trans-Atlantic fare," which it is not. The fare, $382 one way and $690 round trip, remains the same. What you get is the trip to London thrown in . . . The AAA says Canada is enjoying one of the biggest travel and touring years in its history. Twenty-five million Americans are expected to step across the border and rubber this year . . . The Cavalier Saddle Club Horse Show will be held at Bird Neck Point, Virginia Beach, on August 22, according to a dispatch which just arrived by flying mare . . . There's a big quoit and horseshoe pitching tournament today and tomorrow at Beach Park, Wildwood, N. J. A quoit, I think, is something you beat a horse with, and how you'd go about pitching one I certainly do not know. You couldn't put much "stuff" on it, that's sure.

I NOW SEE another note (we might as well beat this thing to death) which says a qwoit is what you used to ask for where you now ask for a fifth. Well, of qwoits . . . Edward Plack, assistant general passenger agent of the Seaboard Air Line Railroad, dropped in with the information that the "Silver Star," streamliner operating between New York, Washington and Florida, will be returned to service next Sunday. The Star will leave here at 2:50 p. m. and pull into Miami before 1 p. m. the next day. Times are standard. Northbound, the streaker leaves Miami at noon and arrives in Washington the next morning at 9:55 . . . Pressly Phillips, of St. Petersburg, Fla., sends in an inversion, viz.: "Definitely closed, at this booming Florida gulf coast vacation capital, is the traditional gap between winter seasons." Okay, Phillips, if that's the way you want it.

At the Bridge Table

Special Events Beckon 'Bushers' to Chicago

By Marian H. Barre

AS LOCAL stars take off for Chicago to play in world or national championships, fans of the common garden variety will feel an overwhelming urge to "look in" on the big show opening Saturday at Hotel Stevens. And there's no reason that they shouldn't. Numerous events are provided for those of lesser talents.

No master points are required for men's pairs, women's pairs, amateur teams or president's pairs, and these are national titles. Only world championships are restricted. Then in addition there are 10 special one-session matches for which even late-comers can pick up a partner. The list includes:

Mouat pairs, at 8:30 p. m., July 31; the Win-An-Entry game, August 1; La Salle pairs on the second; the Goddard Cup game, August 3—all these held in evening sessions. Lake Michigan pairs, a matinee on August 5, Chicago pairs that evening; Stevens pairs at 2 p. m. Friday. On August 7, Cook County pairs at 2 p. m., the Doris Fuller Cup for new partners at 8:30; All States pairs on August 8.

HIGH spot on the current local calendar is the Federal Bridge League's farewell meeting at Pierce Hall Tuesday evening, when master points will be in competition. This is the monthly match for pairs, open to friends of the membership. A meeting of the board of governors will be held the same evening, George Kathan presiding.

On August 2 the league will stage its inaugural in the new quarters at 2600 16th st. nw., playing in the ballroom of this historic house, commonly known as the "Pink Palace." Another battle of the sexes will be waged that evening in men's versus women's teams. John Fletcher is stag chairman, Mrs. Dora Schwarz is in charge of women's enrollments; entries should be made promptly.

Two master point games are scheduled at La Salle Studios, on Monday and Thursday, both beginning at 7:45 p. m. During Manager Mrs. Dixie T. Wright's vacation, which begins the following week, the studio will remain closed until further notice.

The master point may be pursued also in the Arlington Farms Club game of July 30 and at the Walsh Club on the 31st.

A "fifth Wednesday" no longer means an extra meeting for the Agriculture Bridge Club, which after its July recess will change its night to Tuesday, beginning August 3.

Recent master point winners:

July 16 was "Zimmer night" at the Stephan Club—Mrs. C. W. Zimmer won north-south with Mrs. R. S. DuBois while Mr. Zimmer topped the other position, playing with Eldred Mowery. Second honors went to Miller Roberts-Dr. A. F. O'Donnell, Mrs. Dora Schwartz-Mrs. Bernard Rosson.

At Hotel Roosevelt on July 23, Washington Bridge League victors were: Section A, North-South, William Benedict-J. R. Moore, first; Mrs. John Coffee-James Sourelas, second. East-West, Mrs. Pern Henninger-Miller Roberts, first; Mrs. L. L. Gibson-Mrs. Frederick Eberson, second. Section B, North-South, R. L. McKay-H. J. Horn, first; Mrs. M. Linderman-Miss C. Murray, second. East-West, H. Levy-Mrs. Dora Schwartz, first; H. Chapman, M. Ellis, second.

Rails Making New Effort At Being Nice

By T. E. Applegate

NEW YORK, July 24 (AP).—Under the sting of competitive need the railroads are trying as never before to make friends.

Many roads virtually ignored this problem less than three years ago.

Now they have joined in urging employes, both in stations and on the trains, to be courteous and helpful.

Rail officials want their workers to convince you, as passenger or shipper, of their sincere interest in your comfort and welfare.

There's a dollar-and-cents angle, of course. More friends mean more customers. This in turn brings more revenue, makes more jobs.

At the end of 1945 a group in the railroads' transportation study committee reported "only a few" roads making any real effort to improve relations of their employes with the public.

Warning that one ill-mannered worker can make a customer a permanent enemy of the railroad, the report stated:

"Courtesy cannot be left to chance."

While some lines depend on efforts of individual supervisors to instruct and encourage employes in habits of courtesy, others have adopted formal programs—classes, conferences, correspondence courses, circulars and moving pictures.

The Chesapeake & Ohio and Missouri-Kansas-Texas will make hotel reservations. C. & O. also has wooed customers with such devices as auto ferrying service, "no tipping" rules on diners and a central bureau for reservations.

On the New York Central, train crews have been asked to "explain to our passengers" the reason and probable length of any exceptional delay.

Ice pinnacles in Knik Glacier, 25 miles by air from Anchorage Alaska, form a weird landscape in path down mountain. River of ice outdates history.

River of Ice

ONE OF THE MOST awesome sights in all nature is a glacier relentlessly crunching its way from high mountain passes to fan out in the valleys below.

Alaska, which has thousands of glaciers, has none more bleakly awe-inspiring than old Knik outside Anchorage, where the ice splinters into sharp pinnacles and grotesque shapes as it flows over a ridge in the floor of the pass.

Gleaming purple, gold and white in the sun, ghostly grey in the dark, the pinnacles arch ponderously like a host of hooded men in their endless, slow walk downward.

BEN SHAPIRO

He makes the cause of inter-religious harmony his principal work

A bulwark against intolerance . . .

BY VIRTUE OF THE Bill of Rights, America is a land of freedom of religion. By virtue of the experience of history, however, that freedom can easily be lost unless it is zealously defended and advanced in a brotherhood of tolerance and mutual understanding.

One of the staunchest defenders, known to hundreds of priests, parsons and rabbis in the active defense of that freedom, is a mild and tireless man, Ben G. Shapiro, one of the founders, and all-time secretary of the model Massachusetts Committee of Catholics, Protestants and Jews. Whatever your religion, you owe him thanks.

Born in Lynn, Mass., 40-odd years ago, Shapiro has given almost all his life to creating a sense of fellowship among the various religious bodies of his city and state. In 1936, while terror was sweeping over Europe, he helped organize, in Greater Boston, prominent Christians and Jews to build a bulwark against an intolerance that could threaten the keystone of our freedoms.

Has Given Freely of His Time

In the intervening years, Shapiro has given almost all his time away from his job on the United States Investor to the Committee. Since the Committee has no office and no headquarters, charges no dues, and raises no funds except those contributed voluntarily by members and friends, a large part of the organizing has been done from his home in suburban Brookline, Mass.

In its 11 years of life, the Committee has become a major factor in Boston's and Massachusetts' religious life, cooperating with the Governor's Committee for Racial and Religious Understanding, sponsoring Boston's annual Good Will Dinner, promoting inter-cultural understanding in schools, colleges and neighborhoods and awarding citations to civic and religious leaders for outstanding contributions to tolerance.

This year, at a banquet attended by 1,200 leaders in the fight against religious intolerance, including former Secretary of the Navy, Protestant Charles Francis Adams, Catholic Auxiliary Bishop of Boston the Most Rev. John J. Wright, and Jewish A. K. Cohen, Honorary President of Associated Jewish Philanthropies, the long working Shapiro stood up with Congressman John W. McCormick, Admiral William Halsey and Hollywood notable Barney Balaban to receive a surprise citation of his own from Governor Bradford of Massachusetts. His real reward lies, however, in the degree of tolerance and understanding that his unrelenting labor has brought to his state.

If America's 25 million Catholics, 42 million Protestants, and five million Jews are to better understand each other's heritage it will be largely due to the work of quiet men like Ben Shapiro.

"Why don't you admit he's smarter than you and let it go at that?"

ON PARADE . . .

John Merila and Vello Villberg, the subjects of "A Brand New Start in Life" (see pages 5-7) are two Estonian war orphans who were admitted to the United States and placed in the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Clayton, of Hinsdale, Ill. Here on permanent visas, they will probably continue to live in their room at the Clayton's house (below) until they are 21, when they will be given an opportunity to become American citizens.

Working through the United States Committee for the Care of European Children, Mr. and Mrs. Clayton had applied for permission to take Vello into their home last year. Permission was granted but the Claytons were told that Vello had a friend, John, whom he had met in a displaced persons camp. Would the Claytons try to find a home for John, too?

The Claytons would. In fact, they agreed to take John with Vello until another home was found. But when the boys arrived, the Claytons changed their minds. "Have decided not to find another home for John," Mr. Clayton wired. "We'll keep him ourselves."

NEXT WEEK . . .

In many parts of the nation, ambitious groups of Americans are banding together to read and study the world's great books — the literary classics which have shaped the lives and philosophies of millions. Read about this informal approach to adult education in PARADE, next week . . . Also in the same issue, the story of the rigid security measures imposed to guard the nation's principal secret — the atomic bomb . . . Read PARADE, next Sunday.

THE COVER . . .

Just before she left for Europe on a vacation, Rita Hayworth posed for today's cover, wearing the gypsy costume designed for her newest role, that of Carmen in "The Loves of Carmen" (Columbia). The part affords Rita the chance to perform dance routines her famous dancing dad, Eduardo Cansino, taught her as a child. In fact, Rita began her career in Mexico doing many of the same spirited dances before the movies discovered her. During the dance sequences, the red-haired beauty lost so much weight it will take her weeks to regain her normal 120 pounds. Hence that European trip. Photo by Coburn.

At soda fountain in Hinsdale, Ill., John (center) demonstrates how he won high jump to friends and Vello (right). A year ago they were in a DP camp.

A Brand New Start in Life

That's what two war-torn Estonian boys are getting in the U. S. A.

IT HAS BEEN A LITTLE over a year now since John Merila and Vello Villberg boarded a boat bound for the United States with 50 other refugees and war orphans. Behind them — at that time — lay terror, misery and hunger, slave labor camps and common graves. Before them lay a promise and a challenge.

John and Vello looked at America as though they were witnessing a miracle. And as the refugee ship turnd into the Narrows of New York Harbor their heads spun with wonder. A new world was here, and their old world of rags, cold, dirty cellars and twilight had faded behind them.

They had come under the sponsorship of the U. S. Committee for the Care of European Children which, since May, 1946, has brought 1,380 displaced children through U. S. Customs. All of these have since been placed in foster homes through various Catholic, Protestant and Jewish home-finding groups. They are here under permanent visas and will remain wards of the U. S. government until they are 21 years old when they may apply for citizenship.

John and Vello are Estonians who have seen their small, beautiful, lake-and-island country over-run three times by invaders. In 1940 the Russians came; in 1941 the Nazis drove the Russians out and in 1944 the Red Army, in a counter-offensive, came back to stay. Today Estonia lies behind the Communist frontier, an incorporated part of the U.S.S.R.

John, who is now 17, was 14 when the German legions invaded the small Baltic village where he lived with his parents, a brother and two sisters. Efforts to locate his mother and father have been futile since the night be slipped away from home to hide in a cave from the invaders. His brother long since had disappeared into the quicksands of post-war Europe and the two sisters, if they are alive, are now in the Russian zone of Germany.

The Nazis finally captured John and assigned him to a dish-washing detail with the Luftwaffe. But he escaped again, was re-captured and shipped to Danzig where he was assigned to a labor battalion. For the third time he ran away, crossed the German border ahead of the invading Soviet armies and gradually made his way through the Reich into what is now the American Zone. There he wandered into a settlement of displaced Estonians in Thuringen where on the site of a school built by the Germans to train Estonian boys for service in the Reich, he met Vello.

Mrs. John Clayton sews numerals for foster sons John Merila, 17, Vello Villberg, 16, in home they share.

Vello, who is now 16, is the son of an Estonian musician whose whereabouts is now a mystery. For two years Vello had been forced to work in a shoe factory, living an existence of animal-like terror under the Nazis. Later, he, too, had been placed in the Thuringen school where he remained until the Americans came in 1945. Neither he nor John want to talk about it now.

"We are trying to forget," Vello said recently, "but somehow I think that we will never forget."

When the war ended both boys were transferred to a UNRRA camp with other displaced children—Poles, Slovaks, Estonians, Letts—a tired, frightened, ragged company who long ago had forgotten how to hope.

Eventually John and Vello were informed that they could come to America. Working through the Committee for European Children, the Lutheran Church Council's Home-Finding Society had located a home for them in Chicago.

John and Vello sailed and in Chicago were met by two kindly-looking strangers. Their new life began.

Vello (on fence) and John watch schoolmate clear hurdle on jumper. Since coming to America, boys ride horses every opportunity they get.

John, who once was forced to wash dishes for Luftwaffe, and Vello are experts. They share much of Clayton housework between them.

In school library, Vello and John are cramming to catch up with their mates. Both of them lost more than three years schooling during war.

After school, the boys report to Unitarian church where they are employed as janitors. Work includes sweeping steps and mowing lawn.

Handyman John helps Mr. Clayton, his foster father, repair chair. Both he and Vello are willing carpenters, mechanics and radio technicians. Their vacation last year was spent working on a ranch.

To John and Vello, new home.

THE "STRANGERS" WHO greeted the two shy and lonely Estonian war orphans at the Lutheran Center in Chicago were John Clayton, a former newspaper man, and his wife, Helena, a native of Estonia, both of whom are now employed in a Chicago advertising agency. They had lost a son in the war and had volunteered to take John and Vello into their home.

For six months they lived with the boys in their Southside apartment, but John and Vello, strangers and alone, were lost in the hectic clatter of big city life. Filled at once with wonder and terror they found in American urban life a chimera they could not hold, an intransitive something that slipped through their fingers like sand. So the Claytons decided to move.

They chose the small town of Hinsdale, Ill., 20 miles from downtown Chicago, where they enrolled their foster sons in the local high school. And gradually John and Vello began to take root.

At first their marks were poor. They knew little English, and the casual customs of the people around them were strange. But slowly their grades began to improve.

Their teachers and schoolmates helped. Under the guidance of an imaginative principal, the high school students decided that the best way they could come to know the boys was by getting them to help the class with a study of their native land. For weeks the students prowled through the public libraries for data on Estonia, and each day in class they bombarded John and Vello with questions. In response the boys began to talk, slowly and haltingly at first, but eventually with assurance and spontaneity. Within a single term they were speaking English with ease and confidence.

Because John and Vello missed at least three years of school during the war they are still behind other students of their age. But they now take a full schedule of subjects—English, French, world history and geometry—and their marks are improving every day.

John is an Able Athlete

NO LONGER STRANGERS in a foreign land, they have also begun to take an active part in Hinsdale's extra-curricular school life. Last fall John made the high school football team and developed into one of the best place-kick men on the squad. In the spring he won his letter in track, starring in shot-put, discus, broad jump and high jump. As a swimmer he has become a

Husky, 160-pound John is star of Hinsdale school football team, ace shot-put man of track squad. Vello, no athlete, is a talented musician. Both are open-faced, friendly and popular with schoolmates. Although they work after school, each has a girl friend whom he squires in spare time. "American girls," says John, "are delightful."

is a land of wonderful music contender for the national junior breast stroke championship.

John is quiet talks easily and is readily approachable. Vello, who is friendly but not as gregarious as John, isn't interested in athletics. A good musician and an excellent craftsman, he builds radios, repairs automobiles and is a fine cabinet-maker.

They spend their time the way most boys do except that they seem to work a little bit harder than most of their easy-going American companions. School to them is serious business, and so, as a matter of fact, is play.

Their day begins at 7:30 a.m. when Vello, who drives the family car, takes the Claytons, who work in Chicago, to the railroad station. John, in the meantime, has made all the beds and completed the housework. At 8:15 the boys are ready to drive to school.

At noon they return, prepare and eat lunch, stoke the furnace if necessary and return to school. After school—in the fall and winter months—they work as janitors at the Unitarian Church. There they tend the stove, clean the windows, mow the lawn and sweep the church, duties they also perform at home.

At 5 p.m., they set the dinner table, do their homework, play a game of baseball or basketball in the vacant lot next door and drive to the station to meet the Claytons. Their evenings are occupied with study, reading, conversation and bridge.

The boys share a small neat room on the second floor of the Clayton's home. Not unlike any typical American teen-agers room, its walls are decorated with pictures of their parents, of the Clayton's son and of the high school football team. In a corner is Vello's accordian.

Boys Haunt Local Stables

LAST SUMMER THE Unitarian minister in Hinsdale secured for his two hard-working janitors a job on a dude ranch in Wyoming. There, they learned to ride and became so fond of horses that they continue to haunt the Hinsdale stables every chance they get.

Both of them seem fascinated with the scope of America. "Here it is big," John said recently, "and here there is wonderful music."

Asked if they planned to return someday to Estonia, they were silent for a moment and then Vello spoke.

"Return? Yes, for a visit perhaps. But we are Americans now. Our home shall be here."

Evenings at the Claytons are frequently spent playing bridge. Atmosphere is one of an informal mid-western American home. THE END.

The Case of the Fourteen Drivers

Traffic police now turn to test tube and microscope to fix blame for hit-run deaths

At scene of simulated fatal hit-run accident, Massachusetts State Police officers measure car's skid marks. Tire imprints, pieces of broken headlight provide clues to type and year of car. Description of case is broadcast to highway patrol.

BY KARL KOHRS

THE FOG THAT BLANKETED Route Two, near Lexington, Mass., one winter morning, completely hid a treacherous patch of ice at the bottom of the hill. A car came down the hill, spun crazily on the ice, side-swiped the guard rail, then thudded to a stop in the middle of the highway. Dazed and shaken, the driver wrenched open the door and staggered back up the road. His cry of warning was cut short as another car loomed out of the fog and crashed into the first. A second car ploughed into the wreckage, then a third, then a fourth.

When Massachusetts State Police arrived at the scene, they found 14 cars piled up in a shambles of wreckage. A dead man lay in a snow bank at the side of the road. Investigation revealed that he was the driver of the first car and that he apparently had been struck by one of the other vehicles. The other 13 drivers not only denied having struck the man but insisted that they hadn't even seen him, the fog having reduced visibility to zero.

In the State Police crime detection laboratory, examination of the victim's clothing under a powerful microscope revealed a minute speck of dried paint. It was gray on the outer surface, black on the side imbedded in the clothing. This meant that it had come off a black car. Six black cars were involved in the accident. Specimens of paint taken from each differed in chemical composition, age and wear, and only one showed an undercoat of gray. Police finally established that the seventh car had struck the first driver. This was the only car that had originally been gray and had been repainted black.

Laboratory Fixes Responsibility

Massachusetts, like a number of other states, depends more and more on the test tube and the microscope to fix responsibility for traffic accidents. That scourge of the highway, the hit-run driver, is no longer safe from detection. A sliver of headlight glass, a strand of human hair stuck to the edge of a fender, a fabric pattern outlined in the dust on the head of a bolt—these became irrefutable evidence when magnified thousands of times by powerful microscopes and then photographed. Last year, Massachusetts solved 88 per cent of its hit-run cases, and in 87 per cent of the cases, convictions were speedily obtained.

The nation's traffic toll presents a grim picture. In 1947, deaths reached an estimated 32,000, with more than a million injured. The costs in lost wages, medical expenses, insurance overhead and property damage stands at more than two billion dollars. Many of the fatalities were inflicted by hit-run drivers, but few offenders escaped.

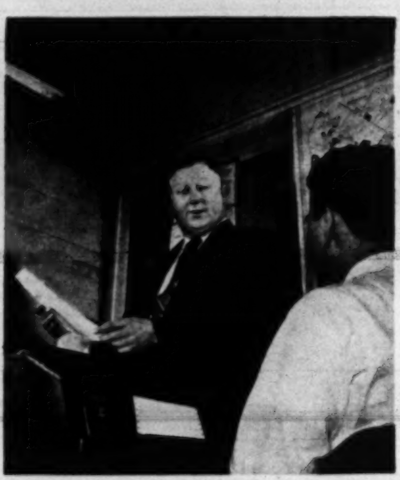
Steps followed in bringing a fugitive motorist to justice with the aid of science are illustrated in the pictures on these pages. They show how the Massachusetts State Police solve a simulated hit-run case in their own crime detection laboratory.

Scratched, broken fender of suspect car is photographed. Combination of swift field communications, keen detective work and laboratory tests put police on right trail.

Evidence builds up as strand of hair and bloodstains are discovered on car fender. Clues are carefully removed to laboratory.

Comparison microscope reveals that hair matches victim's. Blood on fender and on victim's clothing prove to be of same type.

Aided by special optical device, laboratory expert pieces together bits of headlight glass. He seeks clue to car's make.



Bureau of communications teletypes description of clues, as soon as established, to police throughout the state. THE END.

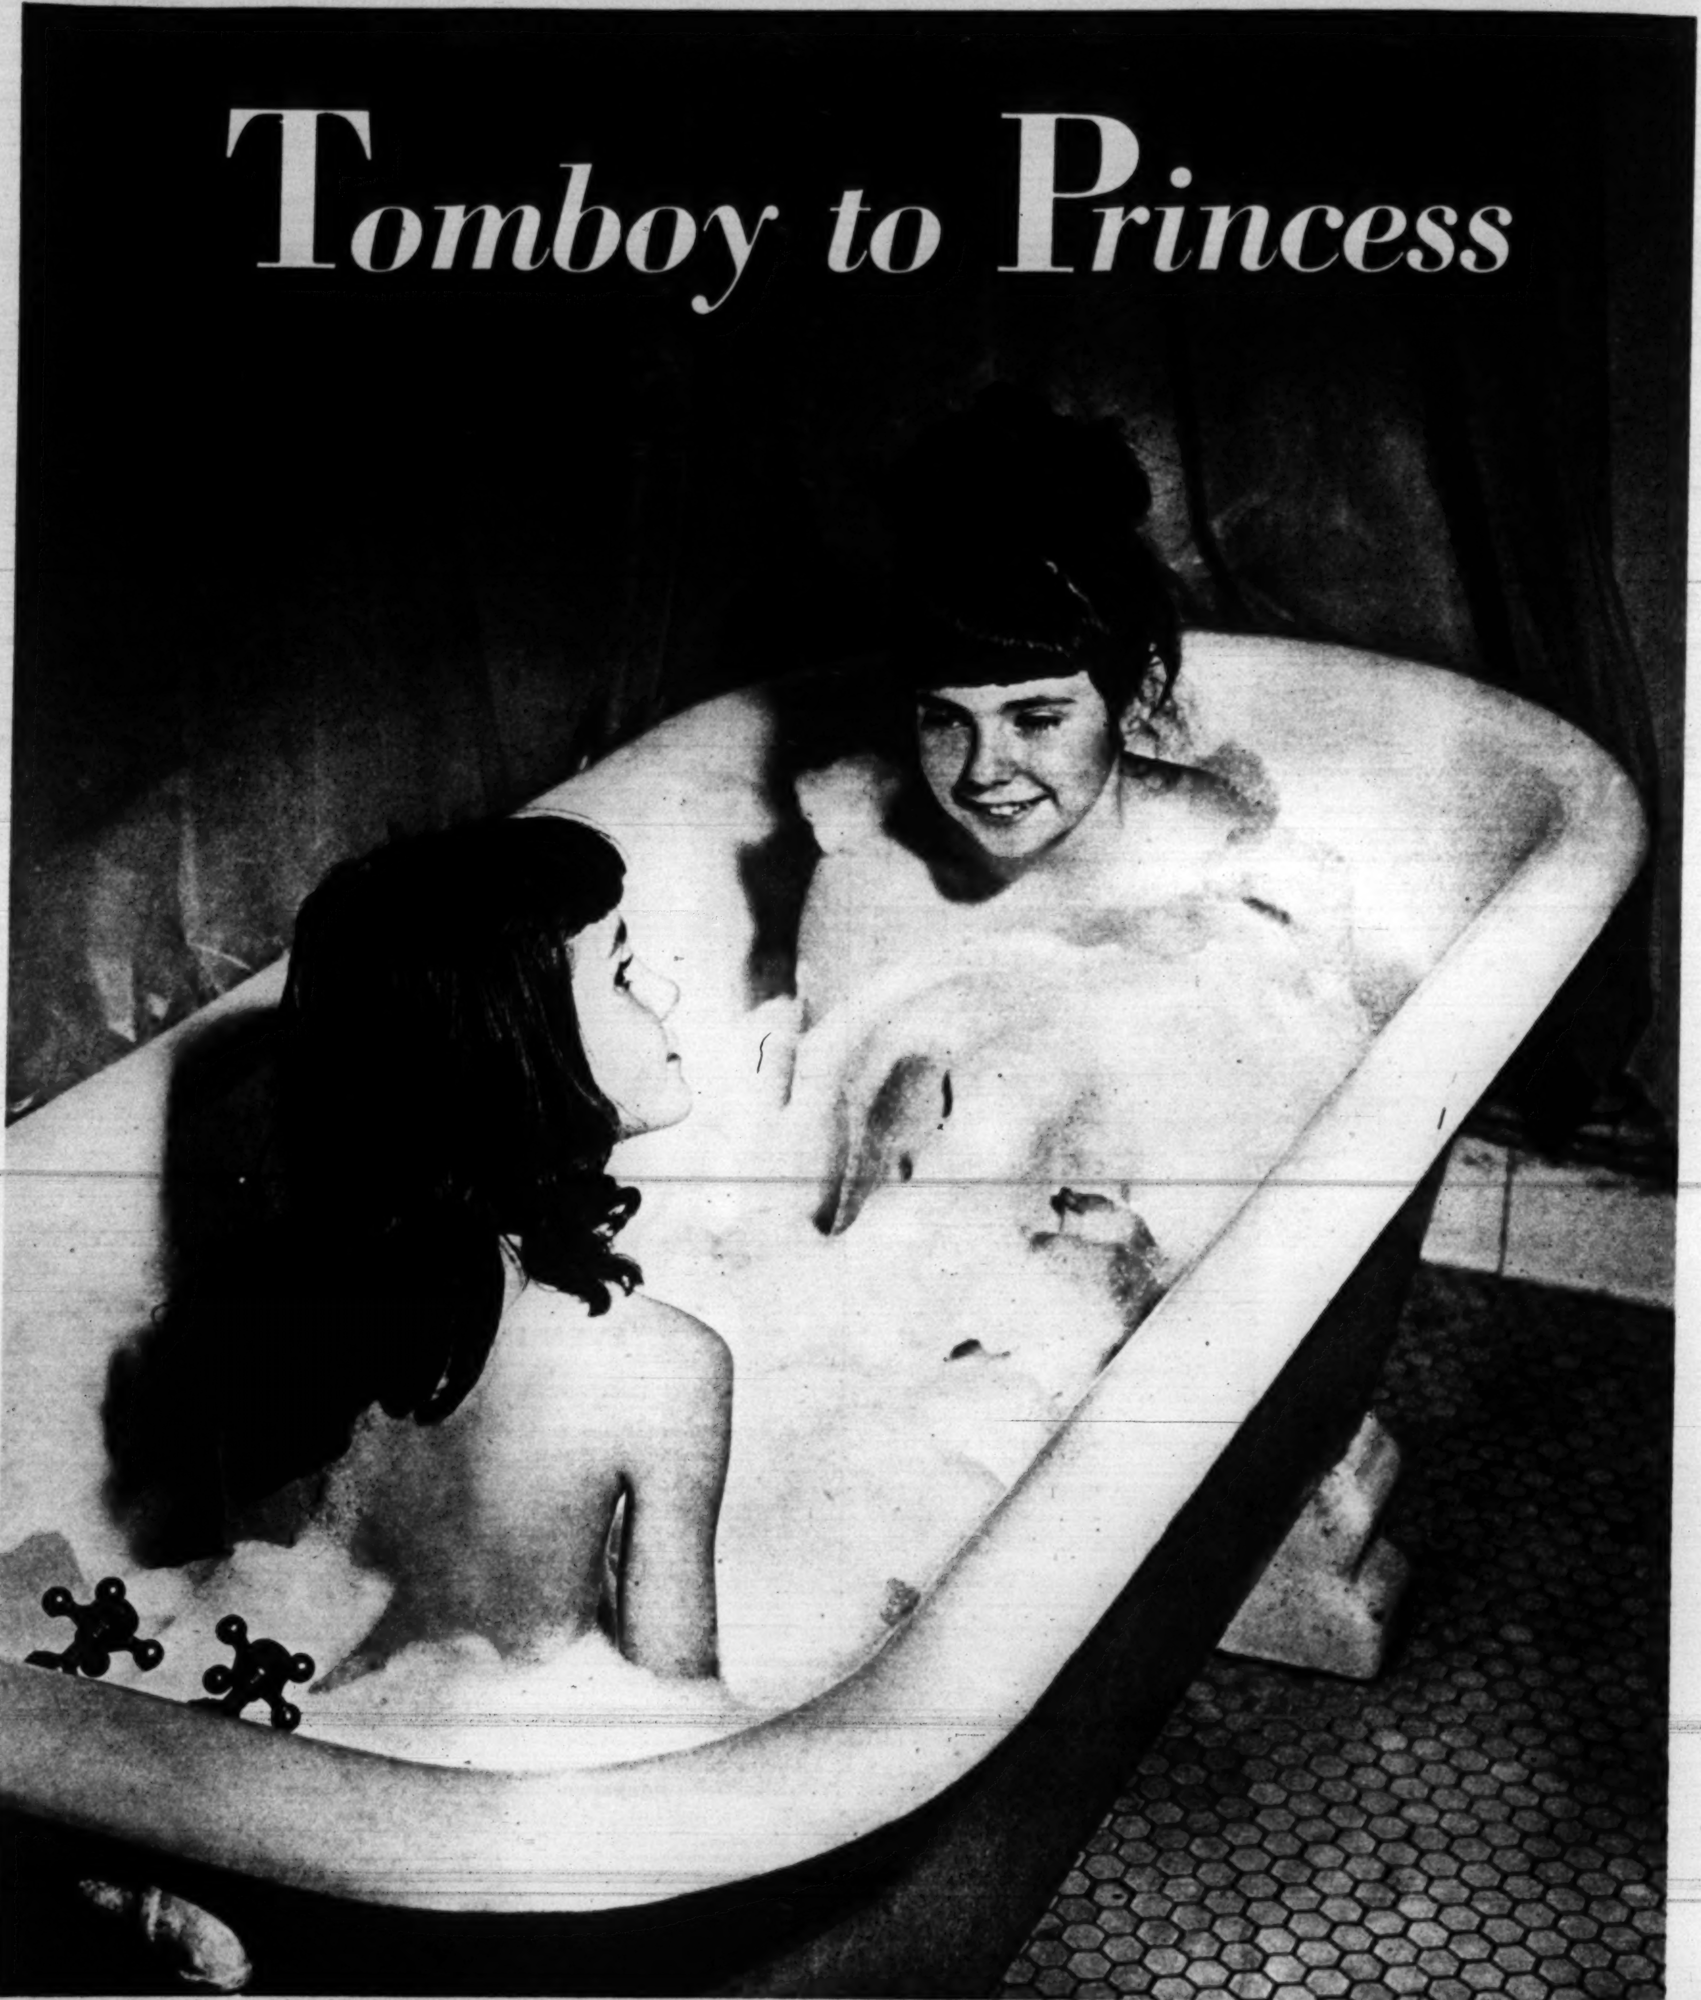
Tomboy to Princess



Before enjoying practical bubble-bath demonstration of their good grooming lessons, girls discard their bubble-gum as well as all other tomboy tactics.

These future Cinderellas gather enough soot and grime in playground to provide any fairy godmother with a major job of transformation.

Home was never like this. Mother no longer need plead for the Saturday night scrubbing. Before she can say Margaret O'Brien it's done.

City moppets practise grooming at early age

CINDERELLA HAD NO "FELLA" till her grime gave way to glamor. The only vanishing cream used in her case was concealed in the godmother's magic wand. Modern Cinderellas, however, though still favoring fairy tales, believe in the realistic approach to good fortune. They believe in using a more energetic method. In New York's Greenwich Village, pre-teenagers consider Hollywood the present headquarters of the never-never land. In fact, they admire one movie mite so much that after play periods they attend classes at a good grooming clinic where they learn "How to look like Margaret O'Brien" and be transformed to sugar-and-spice status.

These prep courses for future beauty parlor sessions probably represent the youngest charm school with the youngest godmother on record as the ideal. After bubble-gum maneuvers, rope skipping, wrestling bouts and other mud accumulating tactics, little Miss Muffet turns to the gamut of glamor. From A to Z she listens and practices hair and tooth brushing, gum massage, manicures, use of toilet water and bath powder. Daily classes are climaxed with dunkings in milky looking bubble-baths which resemble the familiar Hollywood originals.

Margaret O'Brien's screen shadow eclipses many of our pre-sub-debs. Now, in substance, she assures young Cinderellas they'll eventually get their "fellas."

Under the guidance of a Hollywood hair stylist these young students learn how effective the proper coiffure can be in attaining glamor.

With movie star Margaret O'Brien as their model, these little girls learn all about healthful cleanliness and youthful beauty. THE END.

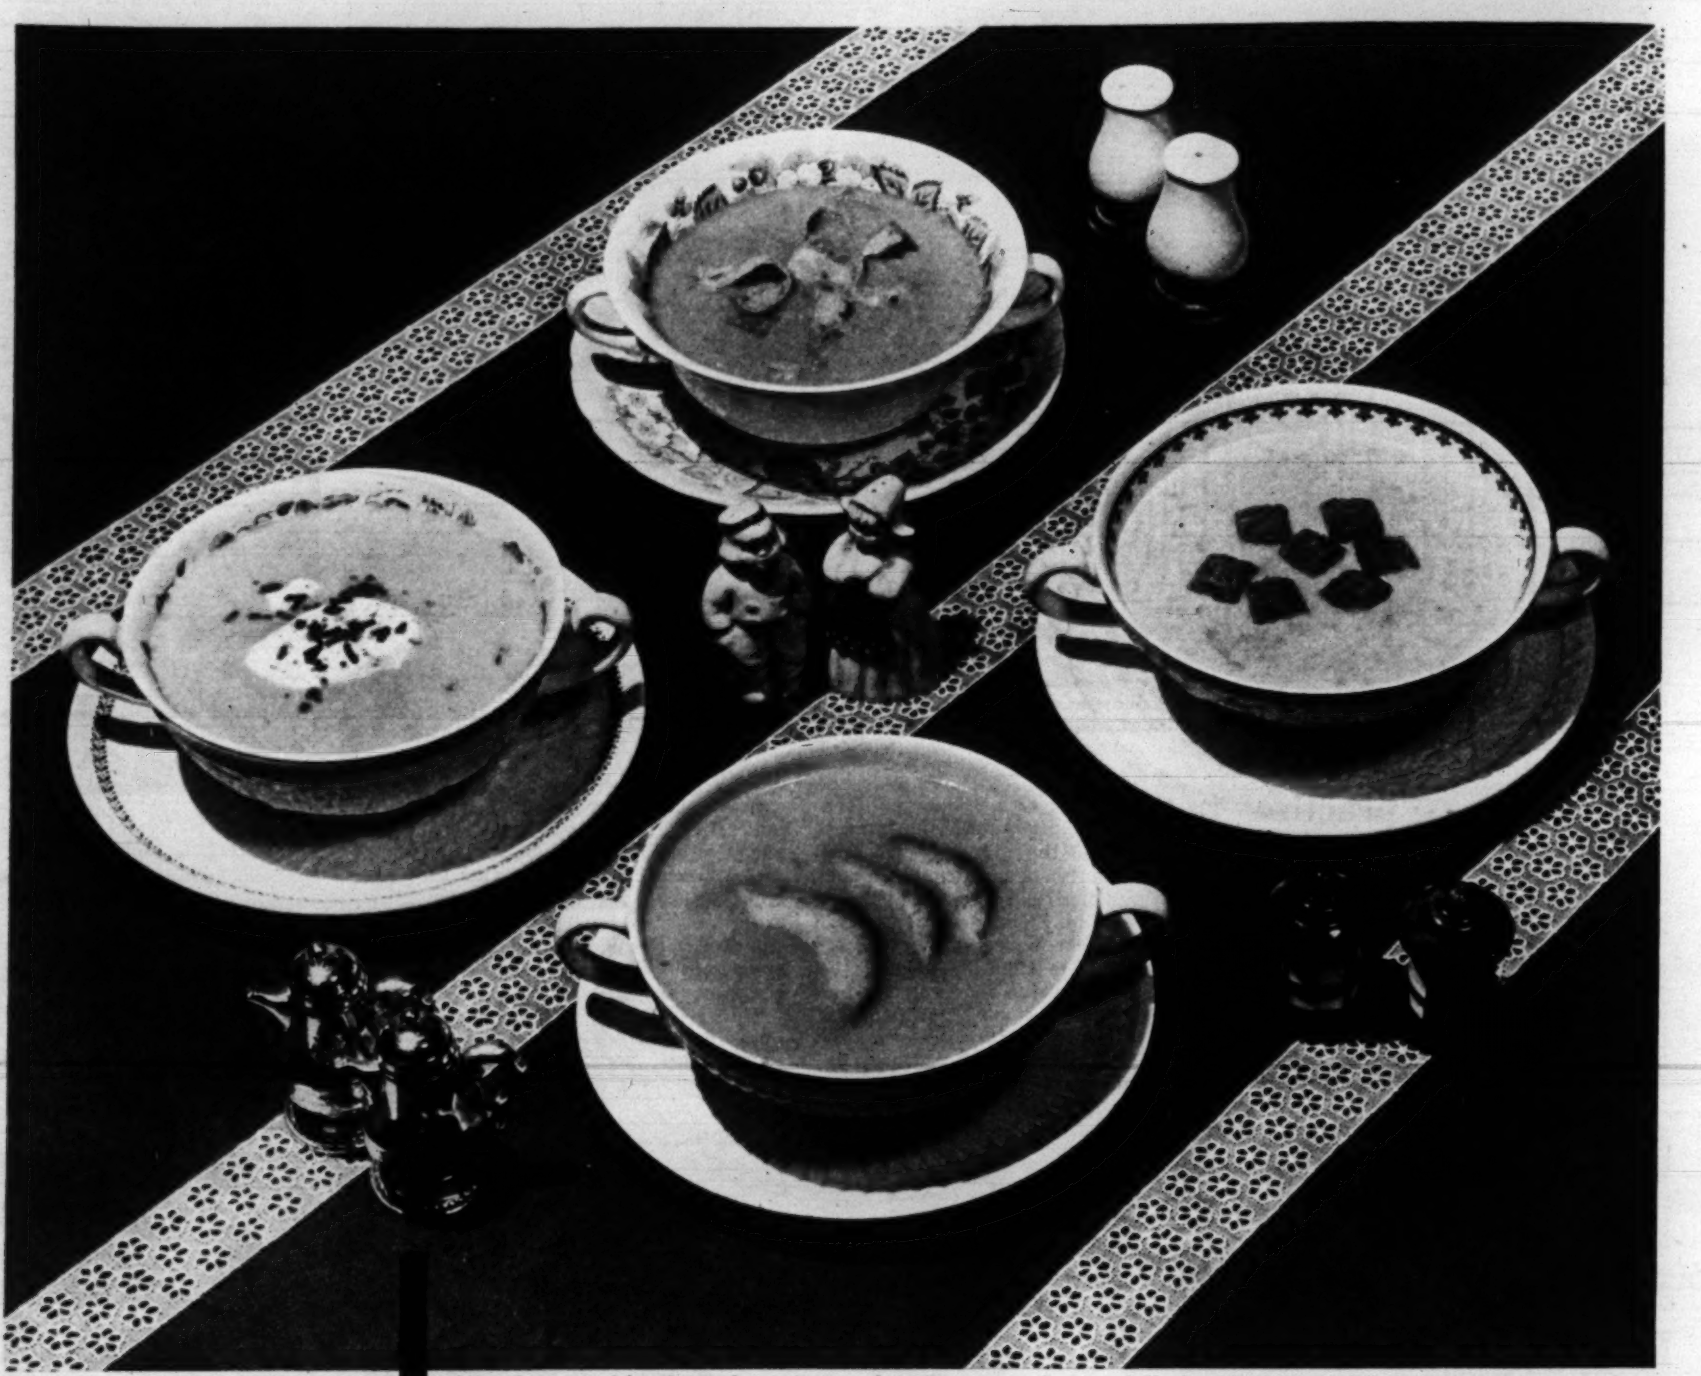
COLD SOUPS FOR SUMMER

BY Bette Merriman



Here is a new idea in cool, summer cookery . . . canned soup, chilled, with cream added, attractively garnished.

tropical tomato

spinach supreme

asparagus sherry

pease porridge

REMEMBER THE SONG the Mock Turtle sang to Alice in Wonderland, "Soup of the evening—beautiful soup?" We would like to change one word, and sing "Soup of the Summer, beautiful soup," because, noon or night, chilled soup is a wonderful beginning for a meal in summer.

There's nothing to it, really, just chill a can of condensed soup for several hours in the refrigerator, then blend in an equal amount of cold, rich milk or light cream, beat for a second or two with a rotary egg beater, pour into soup bowls, garnish attractively, and then serve.

Four flavors are best to serve as cold soup . . . tomato, green pea, asparagus and cream of spinach. Our four versions of chilled soup are pictured above: Front, left: green pea, topped with sour cream and a sprinkling of chives. Front, right: tomato, topped with half-moons of avocado dipped in lime juice. Rear, left: cream of spinach, garnished with crisp corn snacks. Rear, right: asparagus, with sherry added, garnished with crisp, bite-size cereal.

Garnishes are limited only by imagination:

CHILLED TOMATO SOUP can be topped with whipped cream enlivened with a dash of chili powder; thin, scored slices of unpared cucumber; a blend of sour cream, grated horseradish, chopped parsley.

CHILLED GREEN PEA SOUP can be topped with thin slices of cooked frankfurter; a generous sprinkling of crisp, crumbled bacon; sour cream blended with minced, pickled beets.

CHILLED ASPARAGUS SOUP can be topped with cheese Croutons (bread cubes sprinkled with grated cheese and toasted); dainty square cheese crackers; chopped egg and diced pimiento.

CREAM OF SPINACH SOUP can be topped with a blend of whipped cream and curry powder; slivers of canned spiced ham or bologna; thin wedges of unpared red apple. Try one of these garnishes, soon.

A feminine visitor at California sportswear show chuckles at the jaunty appearance of a dummy wearing suede jacket, leather-trimmed felt hat in "puncheon," a reddish-brown shade named after the winecasks of California.

New styles were displayed theatrically on small stage before background scenes of Old West.

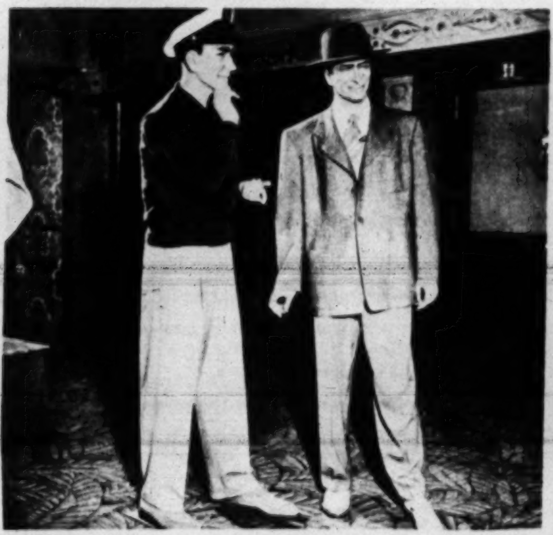
California SPORTSWEAR

MEN'S FASHION SHOW DISPLAYS THAT BRIGHTER, BOLDER LOOK

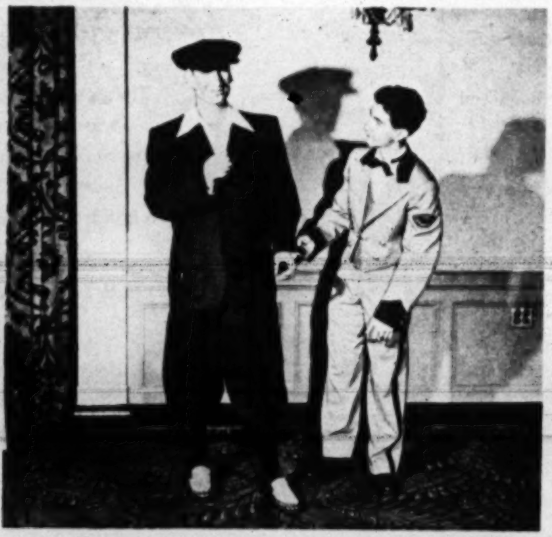
AN ENTERPRISING GROUP of California sportswear manufacturers turned travelling show producers recently and displayed their new fall wares across the country in a unique manner. From New York to Chicago, Washington to New Orleans, they entertained buyers at luncheons, recalled the California of yesteryear while they showed tomorrow's fashions on mannequins which moved mechanically across a festive stage.

Dressed in colorful sombreros and serapes, the ten businessmen, who call themselves the California Dons, took more orders than they dreamed of, found their guests most inquisitive about the unique shoes displayed. Soft and comfortable, the shoes had modified platform soles, came in unusual color combinations. Hats, too, with stitched brims, hand-painted bands, came in for much comment. Of all the handsome, well-styled leisure outfits shown, the "plus-fours" in ruby-port wool, aroused the biggest hand.

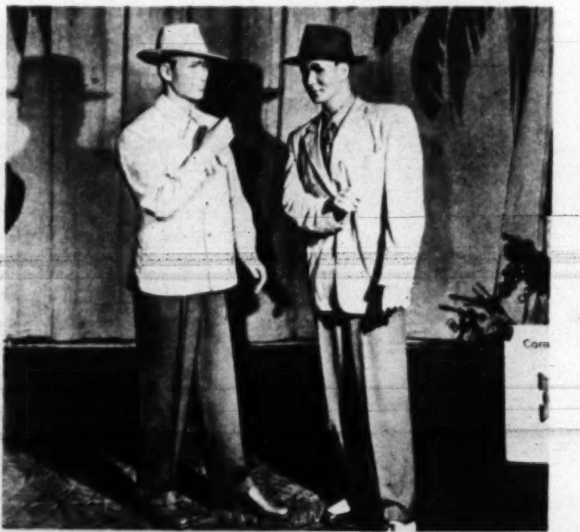
The Dons had the California Wine Institute develop authentic wine tones (ruby-port, champagne, golden sherry, vine green) for their 1949 line, predicted: "Once men wear them, they'll love them."



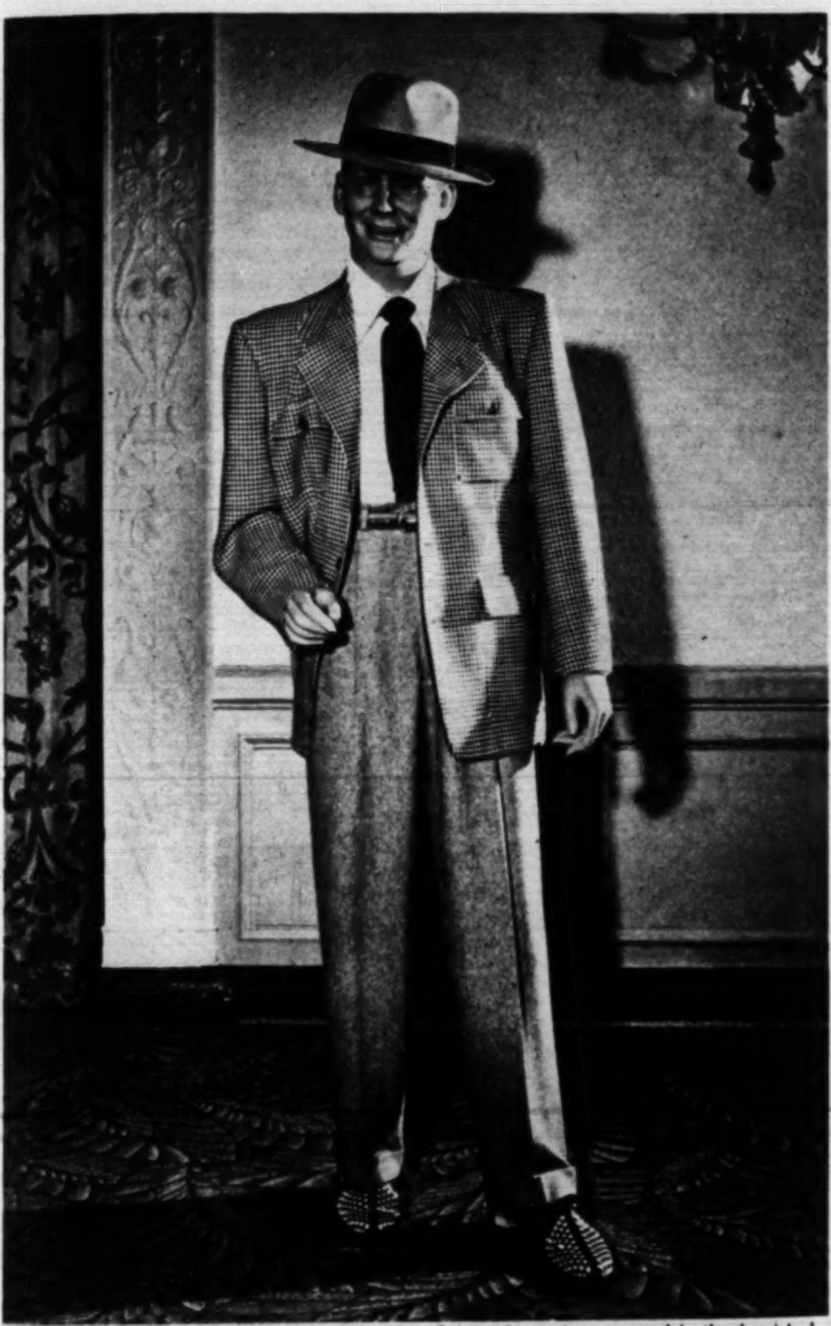
"Deck sweater" has sailor collar, ribbed cuffs and waist band. Leisure jacket has large pockets, box-like look.



For golf: the Dons offer this novel cardigan and knicker outfit with a companion cap in ruby-port worsted wool.

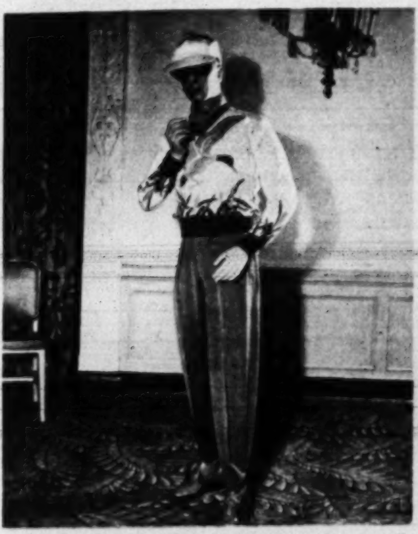


Champagne beige corduroy jacket (left) has matching hat. Featherweight suede jacket (right) is pliant as silk.



Four, buttoned-down pockets lend bold look to this black and white checked jacket.

Color scheme is repeated in the braided, black and white, platformed play shoes.



Ski outfit features mallard and cat-tail border on front and back of the sweater.

After the show buyers move in for closer inspection of styling, materials. THE END.

One of the country's outstanding painters of dogs, Robert Hildebrand holds the attention of a lugubrious bulldog while he makes a pastel portrait of it.

Assisted by movie starlet Anne Kimbell, Hildebrand puts finishing touches on picture of her champion pointer.

CANINES ON CANVAS

Artist dog fancier captures lifelike characteristics with brush

ARTIST ROBERT HILDEBRAND, of Simi, Calif., uses the same get-acquainted technique with dogs that a famous New York photographer uses with men.

To capture the essential character of a person, the photographer first puts him at ease by serving tea or coffee, then chats a while over cigarettes.

Putting a dog at ease and keeping him still long enough to realize his character on canvas is not that easy. But Hildebrand knows dogs, and the result is usually the same as the photographer's.

Here's how the canine painter works:

"I first have a talk with the dog's owner," he says. "That way I learn the dog's personality and the sounds the owner uses to attract his attention."

Briefed with this information he meets the dog.

"If it's a friendly pup like a cocker spaniel, I immediately act just as friendly," he continues. "If it's a stand-offish Scottie, I bide my time and wait for him to make the first friendly move."

Friendly or not at the beginning, the dog always winds up in Hildebrand's corner.

Then comes the "sitting" if it can be called that.

"Some dogs will actually sit—for instance an English bull is easy to work with. A nervous, smooth-haired fox terrier, however, is a handful of springs."

Even a "handful of springs" will sit still long enough for Hildebrand to paint a picture because of the artist's instinctive knowledge of dogs. Moreover, if the occasion warrants, Hildebrand is not above paying blackmail in the form of a dog biscuit or piece of candy when his subject becomes too restless.

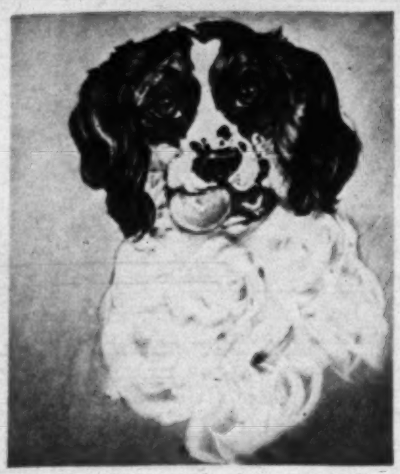
Sitting Takes from One to Two Hours

Depending on the dog's cooperation, Hildebrand can paint its likeness in from one to two hours.

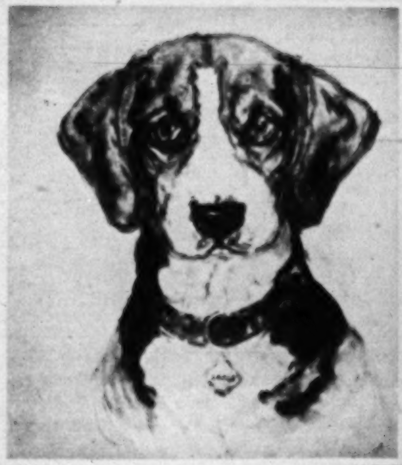
The artist, who was an architectural designer before he lost his job in 1937, took up the painting of dogs at that time as a means of making a living. He's been at it ever since and estimates that he has painted 6,000 dog portraits of more than 100 breeds.

During his 41 years, Hildebrand had owned more than 50 dogs, but what is his favorite breed?

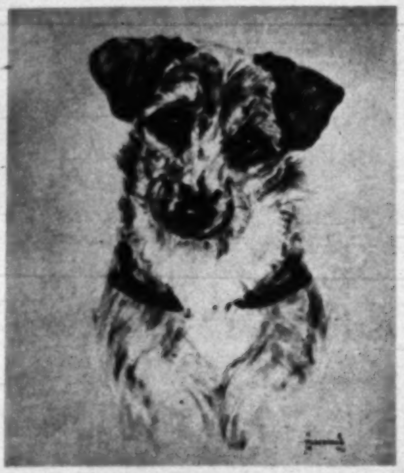
"My favorite is a beagle—they're grand dogs," the artist says. "Strangely, I've never owned one."



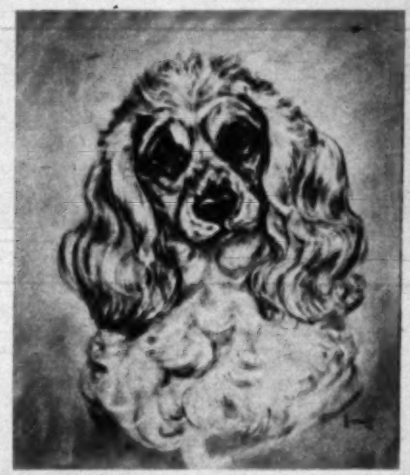
"Boy," ball in mouth, shows appealing characteristics of English springer spaniel.



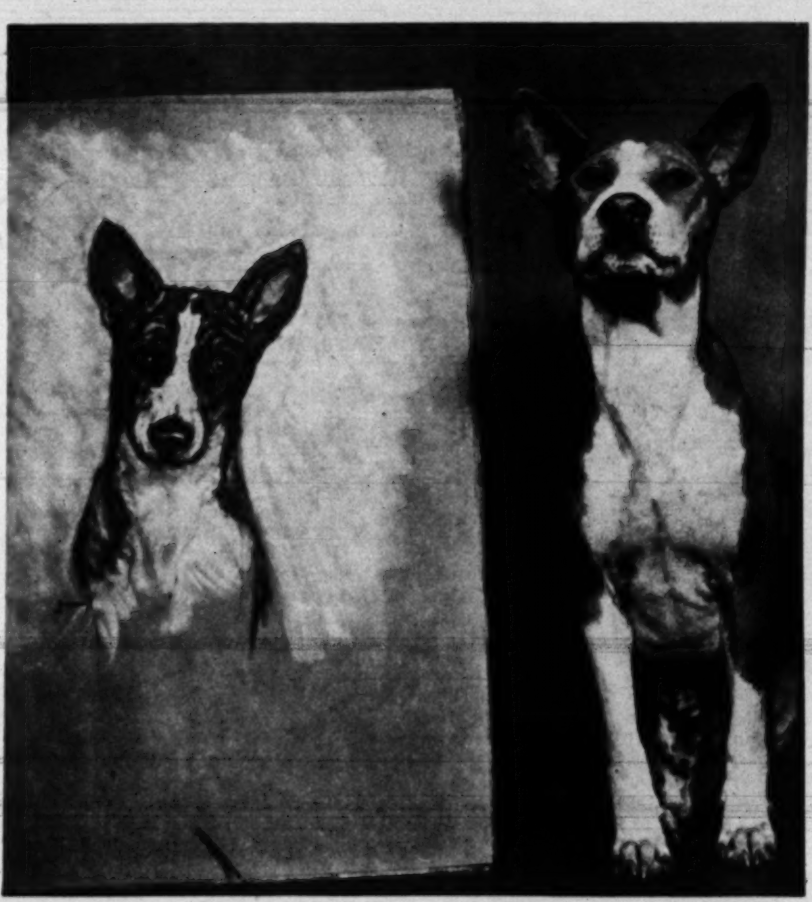
Hildebrand captured the eagerness and inquisitiveness of a beagle in this picture.



This puppy had no pedigree but he made an excellent subject for artist Hildebrand.



Comedian Harold Lloyd's cocker is one of many famous dogs done by Hildebrand.



Of the many rare breeds drawn by Hildebrand is the Egyptian Basenji. Here, "Tshilongo of Kohinoor," called "Flash" for short, looks smug beside portrait. THE END.

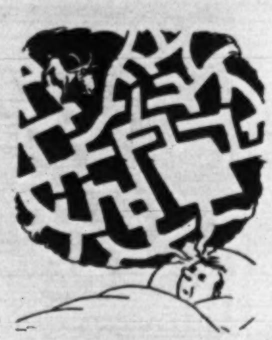
I Can't Sleep!*

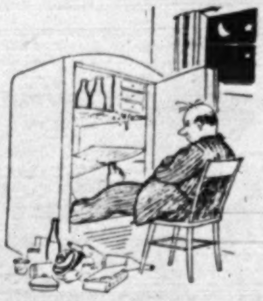
SLEEPING, or pounding the ear, as it is called in high society, is nature's way of rewarding us for the trouble and strain of staying awake all day.

Some have a harder time collecting than others. Author George W. Morrison, an insomniac of long standing in spite of trying the combined advice of his wife, friends, psychologists and other hecklers, has given up hope.

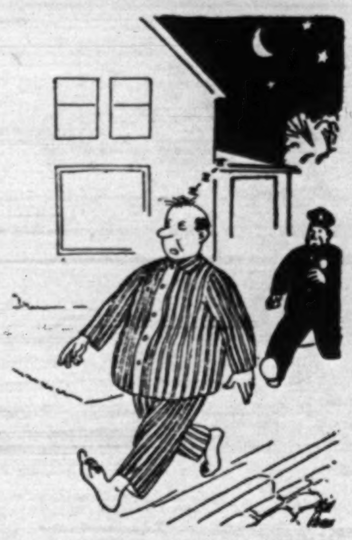
Offering himself as a human sacrifice, he has conscientiously tried out all recipes encountered over a period of 20 years and recorded the results in his book "I Can't Sleep." Some samples of his favorite non-solutions, illustrated by Bill Pause, appear here.



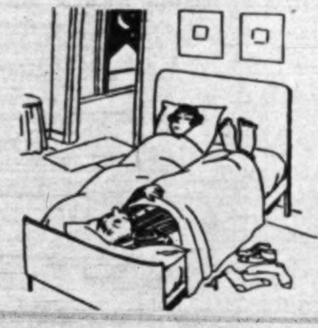
"Goat in the Pen" theory: Instead of counting sheep, pretend you have a goat trying to find his way past many blind alleys. Don't rush.



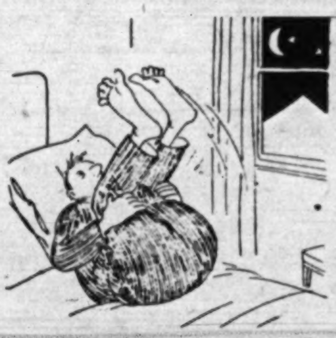
Cool feet: Hot feet keep many people awake, especially in summer. Sit in front of the refrigerator with both feet reclining on bottom shelf.



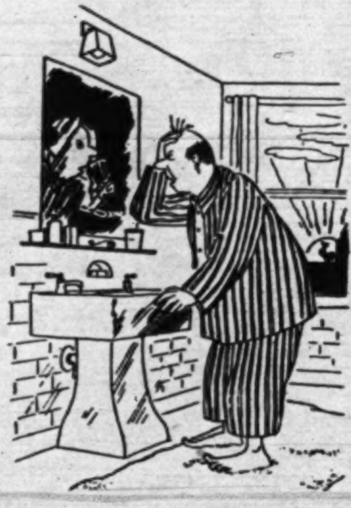
Walking: A trek around the block puts many sufferers in a coma. Some keep it up even after going to sleep. To play safe, sleep in clothes.



Head at foot: If nervous system works so that feet fall asleep before the brain, fool it by reversing position. Explain it to your wife.



Calisthenics: Lie flat on back and draw knees up under chin, stretch out again and repeat twenty-five times. Collapse will occur by dawn.



Self Analysis: After a sleepless night, look at yourself in bathroom mirror. If eyes look like holes burned in a blanket, go see your doctor.

Dean Cromwell, shown with miler Gil Dodds, will bring to the Olympics the best record of any American track coach.

DEAN CROMWELL

Nation's Olympic track coach is a patient and understanding man

BY FRANK DE BLOIS

WHEN THE UNITED STATES Olympic track team marches into London's Wembley Stadium Thursday, to inaugurate the 1948 Olympic games, it will be led by a man whose patience rivals that of Job.

Dean Bartlett Cromwell, who will coach the United States team, waited 30 years for his chance and got it only after Lawson Robertson, who coached four Olympic teams while Cromwell sat on the sidelines, resigned as track mentor at the University of Pennsylvania. The Dean, who is now 68 and in his 39th year as track coach at the University of Southern California, had planned to resign, too, but after Robertson quit he changed his mind in a hurry.

"I'll quit next year," he said, "after we win the Olympics."

Actually, Cromwell's years of patient waiting were spent profitably. For, although he never coached an Olympic team, he developed more Olympic stars than any other coach. Since 1912, 26 Cromwell-coached athletes have made the squad, and six have won championships.

Winners are His Business

At home the Dean's record is equally impressive. He has unquestionably produced more track winners than any master-mind in the business. His teams won the IC4A championships nine times and the NCAA title on 12 occasions. His stars have included Charlie Paddock, fastest human" of the 1920s; Frank Wykoff, who broke Paddock's record; Mel Patton, who broke Wykoff's record; Lou Zamperini, the middle-distance star, and Bill Meadows and Bill Sefton the pole vaulters.

Two factors are responsible for Cromwell's success as a coach. Few coaches have ever been blessed with the avalanche of good material that descends each year upon Southern California. And few coaches have the knack of exploiting their material that Cromwell possesses.

The Dean is an unorthodox coach. No martinet, he uses the psychological approach. When he discovered that his sprinter Wykoff was a fast starter but a slow finisher, he stationed himself halfway to the tape and bellowed at the runner as he speed by. This so startled Wykoff that he leaped ahead like a frightened stag, establishing a sprint record that was unsurpassed for 18 years.

With Charlie Paddock, Cromwell's approach was different. Charlie was a formless runner with bad leg action. The Dean's technique was to leave him alone. As a result, Paddock was unbeatable.

But Cromwell's main gift seems to be his ability to instill in every trackman the feeling that he is unbeatable. "Listen," he told the U. S. Olympians when they boarded the ship at New York, "we're all on a great team—let's all be champions."

Grandmother Takes to Sky

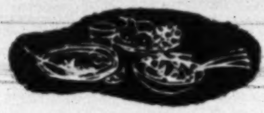
When Mrs. Margaret Todhunter's Deming, N. M., neighbors heard she was taking flying lessons, they shook their heads. A grandmother learning to fly? For the unusual story read PARADE, next week.

Your slim figure is at stake if you over-indulge in high-calorie food and drink.

WHAT TO EAT:

Every Day—

Two glasses of milk; one serving of lean meats and egg; one serving each of green and yellow vegetables (have second helpings if you are hungry); salad and salad again; fresh fruit; tomato juice and tart fruit juices; some bread; one potato—either baked or jacket-boiled; a little butter if you are really active; six to eight glasses of water—but a minimum with your meals.



AVOID:

All fatty foods, such as fat meats, fish and fowl; sour cream dressings; cream in beverages and on fruit and cereal; all creamed and fried foods; concentrated sweets, such as rich pies, creamy deserts, cakes, soda fountain drinks, heavy syrups, jams, jellies, honey, candies and sugar in your coffee and tea.

EAT IN SMALL QUANTITIES:

All starchy vegetables, such as beans, peas, canned corn and lentils.

EAT LIBERALLY:

Fresh fruit and berries without sugar; leafy green and yellow vegetables and salads, the latter with lemon juice or very little French dressing; lean meat, fish and poultry; clear soup; grapefruit; tomatoes; low-fat cheese, such as cottage or farmer's cheese; skim milk and buttermilk.

Simple, practical diet rules like these help keep your curves under control.

VACATION GUIDE

BY ANN WILLIAMS-HELLER

Author of "It's a Sin to be Fat"

YOU PACK YOUR BAGS, make a quick getaway to that cottage by the lake or your favorite seashore resort and settle down to enjoy yourself. You swim, soak yourself in sunshine, play golf, ride, make new friends, dance away the cool summer evenings with never a worry about getting to bed early. For the present, you're beyond the tyranny of the alarm clock, and you can indulge in the luxury of sleeping late. Your life is your own—as different from your workaday existence as you can possibly make it. That is as it should be, because that's vacation.

It is only when you are on your way home, with your luscious tan and crisp out-of-doors look, that you begin thinking of the moment when you must step on your scales and find out what your vacation has cost you in added pounds. You remember, with a belated twinge of conscience, those wonderful shore dinners, those juicy steaks, tempting salads, fluffy meringues, creamy eclairs, and so on ad infinitum — extra calories by the thousands. The sad fact is that, while you were on vacation, your body-machine was working overtime. There ought to be a law.

There is. It is the natural law of cause and effect. The cause is a combination of wrong foods and wrong eating habits. The effect is that suspicion of a rubber tire around your cherished waistline. But there is no reason why you need have a vacation at the cost of your figure, your looks and your general well-being. You can have all the fun you want—if you keep in mind that there are four ways in which you can be lured from the straight and narrow path of discreet diet and weight control. Like all other forms of temptation, these four are much easier to yield to than resist.

Four Vacation Temptations

TEMPTATION NUMBER ONE: The change of pace. Your days are taken up with leisurely activities. There are no tensions—you do exactly as you please. You are relaxed and comfortable, and you linger over your meals. All this makes for better utilization of foods, with the result that your appetite gradually gets out of hand. And remember: "Appetite" differs from "hunger." Hunger is the body's legitimate call for food. Appetite is a desire or a craving that can easily distort your good eating habits into bad ones. Be careful!

Temptation number two: Vacation menus. In the city—at home or in restaurants—you yourself select the foods in conformity with your dietary needs. Vacation spots usually cater to the "average" guest, who, presumably, needs heavier foods to satisfy his average appetite. Meals may be top-heavy

You can let yourself go on your vacation and still keep your curves intact if you only sidestep the snares of overeating with rich soups, creamed vegetables and starchy pies. Moreover, there is usually a full bread tray on the table, and you are inclined to help yourself between courses.

Temptation number three: The social whirl —those cocktail parties, for example. That canape tray comes 'round too often, and so do the cocktails. You aren't aware of the fact that one old-fashioned contains as many calories as a slice of meat loaf—150. Like the plaintive Ado Annie in Oklahoma! you're "jist a girl who cain't say no."

Temptation number four: Your own recreational activities. They may increase your appetite far beyond bodily needs. All your activities require energy, and the energy you expend is measured in calories (the common yardstick of heat and energy). The foods you eat carry energy and yield calories in the process of burning (digestion) in your body. Exactly how much energy or how many calories you need depends on your actual weight and your physical activities. The average healthy person requires 18 to 22 calories for each pound of body weight. There are, however, variations with physical activity.

For example, if you go horseback riding for one hour, you consume the energy contained in a medium-sized orange. Walking for one hour at the speed of three miles an hour requires the energy contained in three-quarters of a cup of fresh raspberries. On the other hand, if you have an extra cola, and your normal requirements already have been met by your three square meals, it will take you 40 minutes to walk it off. An extra serving of apple pie calls for two hours of walking. Unless there is additional activity to compensate for that extra calorie intake, surplus energy in foods becomes body fat, even though you swim, ride, golf and hike like mad to keep your curves under control.

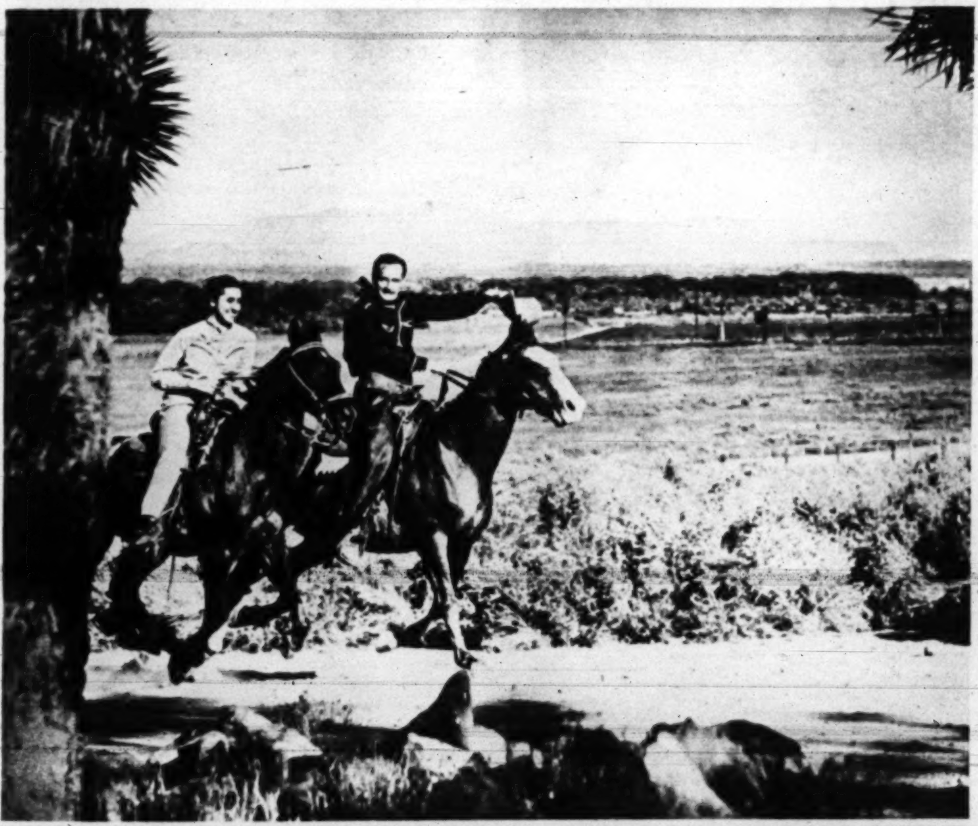
So much for vacation temptations. Once you know what they are and where they are, you can beat them at their own game. One of the key factors in reducing is to base your energy needs on your ideal weight instead of your actual weight. (Life insurance companies and the United States Public Health Service have compiled weight tables — based on long years of study—which are arranged according to sex, height and age.) Your extra pounds call for energy, and will continue to do so as long as you carry them around. If your foods do not supply the extra energy required by your extra weight, your body will burn up fat reserves. And that does the trick: You reduce your fat and consequently your weight without changing your activities.

Appetite Exaggerates Needs

EAT THREE SQUARE MEALS a day and allow yourself extra foods (calories) on the basis of extra activities. But don't forget: Those surplus needs are actually small compared with your ordinary non-vacation requirements. Your holiday appetite simply exaggerates them. And so, if strenuous activity is your notion of holiday fun, by all means let yourself go. You may find yourself needing an in-between snack. In that case, eat an apple, or have a glass of buttermilk with a dry cracker. Even a glass of fresh water may do.

Have your salad—preferably without dressing—at the beginning of your meal to take the edge off an unruly appetite. Count your bread slices; one at a meal is a good average rule. Instead of creamed soups, have tomato or tart fruit juice. As for dessert, pass up cake or pie in favor of fresh fruit.

Food in ample quantities, properly selected —not starvation—is the key to slimness. If you know what to eat, you can sidestep those vacation temptations with the greatest of ease. You can have your fun and still match curves with Venus di Milo, who, poor gal, probably knew nothing whatever about counting her calories.



Exercise, with properly-selected foods, keeps you streamlined and in the pink. THE END.

How Ignorance and Prudery can destroy a wife's happiness

Learn here the REAL TRUTH about these Intimate Physical Facts!

Often a woman's married life isn't happy simply because she hasn't proper scientific knowledge of these intimate physical facts. And she's too lazy or shy to find out. Or she may be following ignorant advice of 'supposed' girl friends.

So here's really a chance to learn scientific truth you can trust. Girls, you must realize how important vaginal douching often is to intimate feminine cleanliness, charm, health and marriage happiness—to combat one of woman's most embarrassing deodorant problems. And so very important—why you should put ZONITE in your douche.

Truly A Modern Miracle!

Scientists tested every generally known antiseptic and germicide they could find on sale for the douche. And NO OTHER TYPE proved SO POWERFUL yet so SAFE to tissues as ZONITE—the first antiseptic-germicide principle in the world with such a powerful germicidal and deodorizing action yet absolutely harmless. You can use ZONITE as directed as often as needed without the slightest risk of injury. It's positively non-irritating, non-burning, non-poisonous.

Zonite Principle Developed By Famous Surgeon and Scientist

The ZONITE principle was developed by a world-famous Surgeon and Scientist. What better assurance could you want? ZONITE destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances, helps guard against infection—it's so powerfully effective it immediately kills every germ it touches. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. BUT YOU CAN BE SURE ZONITE does kill every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying. Complete douching directions with every bottle.

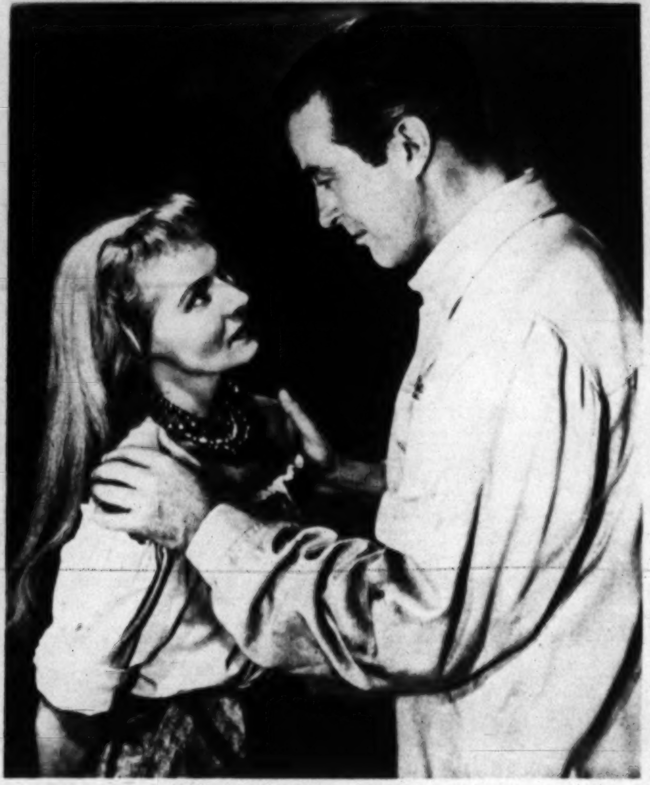
BY KAY SULLIVAN

MR. PEABODY AND THE MERMAID

What would you do if you went fishing and caught a mermaid instead of a bass? Mr. Peabody (William Powell) did just that and brought his pretty catch (Ann Blyth) home to his villa pond. She ate up his tropical fish, frightened his wife, bit one of his feminine admirers in the leg. Mr. Peabody didn't mind too much because it was such fun to teach a mermaid how to kiss, but when his wife disappeared and the police started investigating, he had to give up his deep sea darling. A whimsical tale, well done, recommended for fathoms of fun. (Universal).

A FOREIGN AFFAIR

Marlene Dietrich plays a glamorous German singer who is exposed as an ex-Nazi by a prim Iowa congresswoman. Jean Arthur, too long from the screen, is tops as the investigator. John Lund is handsome hero. An excellent comedy with authentic Berlin background. (Paramount).



SO EVIL MY LOVE

Ann Todd and Ray Milland are the ill-fated lovers in this suspenseful drama. Milland plays Mark Bellis, a philanderer who insinuates his way into the quiet life of a widow (Miss Todd), forces her to commit blackmail and then murder. A grade "A" thriller. (Paramount).

THE VELVET TOUCH

Only Captain Dunning (Sydney Greenstreet) suspects secrets buried in diary of Valerie Stanton (Rosalind Russell). Miss Russell plays the role of a hot-tempered comedienne who finds herself unsuspected after committing a murder. Mixes suspense and comedy. (R.K.O.).

TAP ROOTS

Van Heflin (left) and Ward Bond (center) are ringleaders in an exciting Mississippi swamp battle which highlights this story of family loyalties in Civil War days. Susan Hayward makes a pretty leading lady. An involved plot, well staged and acted.(Universal).

JULIA MISBEHAVES

Peter Lawford, Walter Pidgeon, Greer Garson and Elizabeth Taylor collaborate in this frothy comedy about an irrepressible lady named Julia. Miss Garson as Julia outdoes herself. It's fun if you can stand the shock of seeing "Mrs. Miniver" do acrobatics. (M.G.M.)

GOOD SAM

The title is short for Good Samaritan which is what Gary Cooper is in this film. His preoccupation with other people's troubles makes him neglect his wife (Ann Sheridan). Sam learns the hard way that charity begins at home. Homespun, pleasant comedy. (R.K.O.).

THE GALLANT BLADE

Swords flash constantly in this colorful (Cinecolor) melodrama about the France of 1648. Larry Parks, a master of the blade, falls in love with his enemy's sweetheart and spy (Marguerite Chapman). The end is obvious. Spectacular action, scenery. (Columbia).

THE WALLS OF JERICHO

Small town intrigues, murder, politics and romance are mixed in this story of two couples—Linda Darnell, Kirk Douglas (above) and Anne Baxter, Cornel Wilde. Villainness Linda gets her just reward. Sincere performances by all. (20th-Century Fox). THE END.

THE Golden Hawk
by FRANK YERBY
You'll Thrill to this Adventure-Packed Tale of a Bold Buccaneer–and the Wildcat Beauty He Taught How to Love!

YES, it's true – you can have a copy of Frank Yerby's brand new novel "The Golden Hawk" —in this handsome, full-size edition—for just a 3-cent stamp simply by joining the Dollar Book Club now!

And what a story this is—a story blazing with swift action and exotic love in the pirate-infested, gold-laden Caribbean of the seventeenth century. Here roamed the yellow-haired looter from Cadiz—Gerardo, the Golden Hawk. Men shuddered as they spoke of him in whispers. But to women, he was the fulfillment of a dream. From the humblest tavern wench to the fairest among the high-born, women were the most willing of his conquests. All except one.

She was Rouge, the English noblewoman turned buccaneer—Rouge of the sea-green eyes and the flaming hair. While the adventurers of France and England clashed head-on with the might of imperial Spain, these two outcasts seethed between bitter rivalry and a great passion that neither could conceal. How Gerardo taught Rouge the sweeter choice makes one of the most tempestuous and enthralling love tales you have ever read!

The author of The Foxes of Harrow and The Vixens has outdone himself in his newest novel The Golden Hawk. And it's yours for just a 3-cent stamp if you join the Dollar Book Club now!

And in attractive, full-size library editions, bound in a format exclusively for members!

Start Enjoying Membership Now

Upon receipt of the attached coupon with a 3-cent stamp, you will be sent a copy of Frank Yerby's exciting new romance "The Golden Hawk." You will also receive as your first selection for $1.00 your choice of any one of the popular current best-sellers described just below:

- Yankee Pasha by Edison Marshall. From the harbors of Salem to the harems of Tartary, this fighting Yankee sought his kidnapped bride—and found a new love!
- Came a Cavalier by Frances Parkinson Keyes. The thrilling new best-selling story of the New England girl who became a baroness, wife of an ardent cavalier and modern mistress of a medieval manor.
- Annie Jordan by Mary Brinker Post. The heart-warming story of a girl who learned early that nothing in life comes easy, yet fought her way to happiness.

EVERY other month you will receive the Club's descriptive folder called The Bulletin. The Bulletin describes the forthcoming two months' book selections. It also reviews about ten additional titles (in the original publishers' editions selling at retail for $2.50 or more) available to members at only $1.00 each. You may purchase either or both of the two new selections for $1.00 each, or neither. In any case, you may purchase any of the other titles offered for $1.00 each.

WHAT IN THE WORLD ARE YOU GOING TO DO WITH THAT OLD-FASHIONED LAMP?
I'M PUTTIN' IT IN FRONT OF THE HOUSE! I'M HAVIN' THE LUMBER COMPANY SEND UP A NICE POLE—AND ONE OF THEM FANCY SIGNS!
OH, PHILIP—NO! THEY LOOK LOVELY IN FRONT OF HOUSES IN THE COUNTRY—BUT IT WOULD BE OUT OF PLACE AROUND HERE!
IT WILL NOT! IF BARNEY HIGGINS CAN HAVE ONE, I CAN HAVE ONE, TOO!
BARNEY HIGGINS HAS A COLONIAL TYPE HOUSE, PHILIP—AND HE LIVES OUT IN THE SUBURBS WHERE LOTS OF PEOPLE HAVE THEM!
WHAT'S THAT GOT TO DO WITH IT? I SAY IT'LL GO PERFECT WITH OUR WHITE PICKET FENCE!
I THINK MA IS RIGHT, UNCLE PHIL! THEY LOOK SWELL IN THE RIGHT PLACE—BUT OUR HOUSE ISN'T THE KIND THAT—I DON'T WANT TO HEAR ANY MORE ABOUT IT, MICHAEL! GO IN THE HOUSE—I CAN DO THE REST OF IT ALONE!
Reg. U.S. Pat. Office McNaught Syndicate, Inc.
I STILL SAY IT'S OUT OF PLACE, PHILIP—AND I'M AFRAID THE BOYS AT CLANCY'S WILL THINK YOU'RE GOING HIGH HAT!
THAT'S JUST YOUR OPINION! GOOD NIGHT!
BY GOLLY—I SURE SLEPT SOUND LAST NIGHT! PUTTIN' UP THAT LAMP TIRED ME OUT, I GUESS!
OH-OH! MA WAS RIGHT ABOUT THE BOYS AT CLANCY'S, UNCLE PHIL!

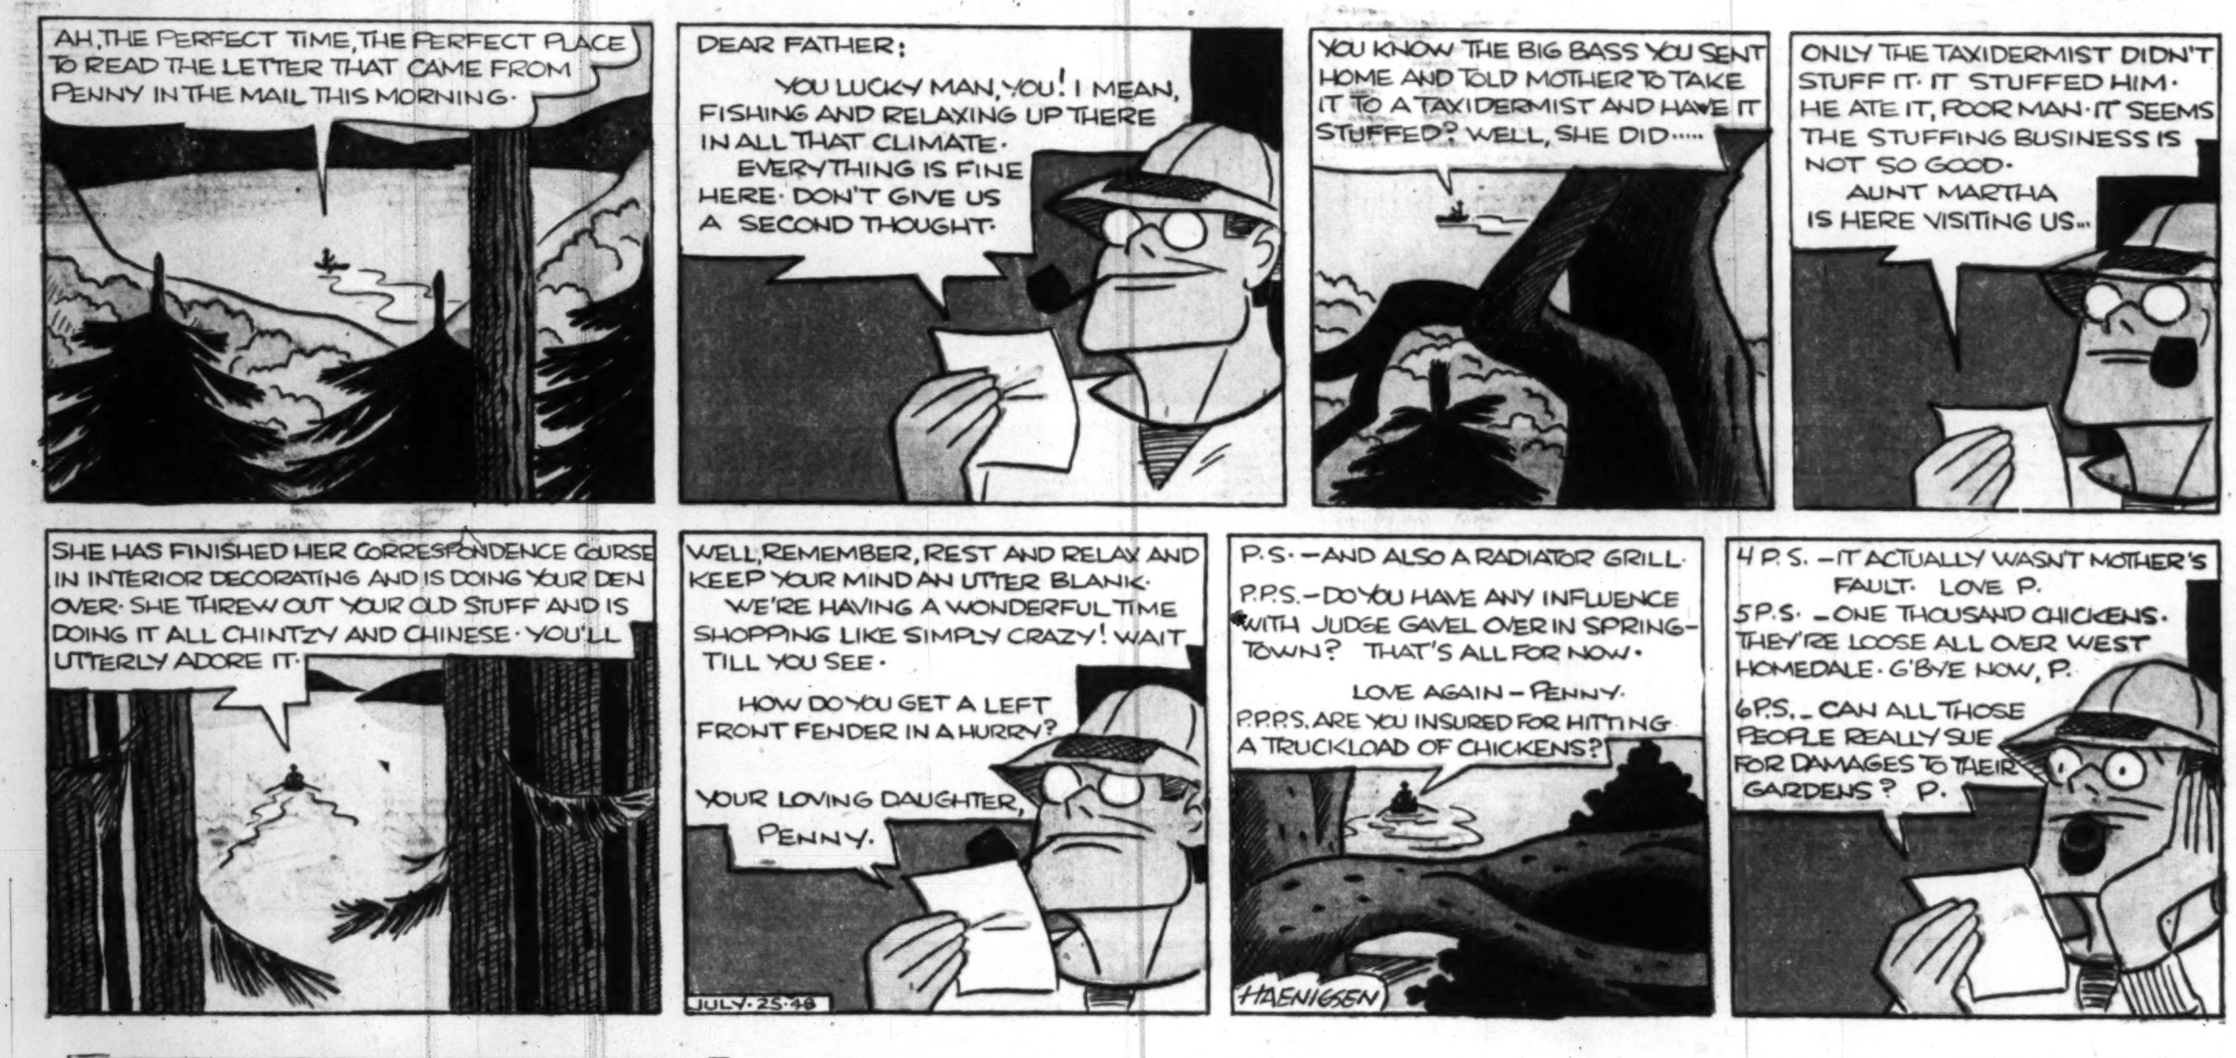
By Harry Haenigsen



AH, THE PERFECT TIME, THE PERFECT PLACE TO READ THE LETTER THAT CAME FROM PENNY IN THE MAIL THIS MORNING.
DEAR FATHER: YOU LUCKY MAN, YOU! I MEAN, FISHING AND RELAXING UP THERE IN ALL THAT CLIMATE. EVERYTHING IS FINE HERE. DON'T GIVE US A SECOND THOUGHT.
YOU KNOW THE BIG BASS YOU SENT HOME AND TOLD MOTHER TO TAKE IT TO A TAXIDERMIST AND HAVE IT STUFFED? WELL, SHE DID.....
ONLY THE TAXIDERMIST DIDN'T STUFF IT. IT STUFFED HIM. HE ATE IT, POOR MAN. IT SEEMS THE STUFFING BUSINESS IS NOT SO GOOD. AUNT MARTHA IS HERE VISITING US...
SHE HAS FINISHED HER CORRESPONDENCE COURSE IN INTERIOR DECORATING AND IS DOING YOUR DEN OVER. SHE THREW OUT YOUR OLD STUFF AND IS DOING IT ALL CHINTZY AND CHINESE. YOU'LL UTTERLY ADORE IT.
WELL, REMEMBER, REST AND RELAX AND KEEP YOUR MIND AN UTTER BLANK. WE'RE HAVING A WONDERFUL TIME SHOPPING LIKE SIMPLY CRAZY! WAIT TILL YOU SEE. HOW DO YOU GET A LEFT FRONT FENDER IN A HURRY? YOUR LOVING DAUGHTER, PENNY.
JULY·25·48
P.S. —AND ALSO A RADIATOR GRILL. P.P.S.—DO YOU HAVE ANY INFLUENCE WITH JUDGE GAVEL OVER IN SPRING-TOWN? THAT'S ALL FOR NOW. LOVE AGAIN — PENNY. P.P.P.S. ARE YOU INSURED FOR HITTING A TRUCKLOAD OF CHICKENS?
HAENIGSEN
4 P.S. —IT ACTUALLY WASN'T MOTHER'S FAULT. LOVE P. 5 P.S. —ONE THOUSAND CHICKENS. THEY'RE LOOSE ALL OVER WEST HOMEDALE. G'BYE NOW, P. 6 P.S. — CAN ALL THOSE PEOPLE REALLY SUE FOR DAMAGES TO THEIR GARDENS? P.

Prince Valiant
IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR
BY HAROLD R FOSTER
Registered U.S. Patent Office
Synopsis: PRINCE VALIANT AND HIS SQUIRE, OSK, DISCOVER WHY KING ARTHUR'S BEST KNIGHTS NEVER SURVIVE A VISIT TO KING TOURIEN'S CASTLE. IN THE HOUR BETWEEN DARKNESS AND DAWN THEY RETURN, RUNNING, A PACK OF HOUNDS IN FULL CRY BEHIND THEM!
THE PATTER OF RUNNING FEET STARTLES A FOX INTO DROPPING ITS PREY.......
WHICH VAL IMPALES ON HIS SPEAR, DRAGGING IT BEHIND; FOR ALREADY A PLAN IS FORMING IN HIS QUICK MIND.
"FOLLOW THAT BROOK TO OUR CAMP! STAY IN THE WATER SO THE HOUNDS CANNOT GET YOUR SCENT!"
FAR UP THE ROAD VAL LEAVES SPEAR AND HARE, THEN RETURNS TO WHERE HE HAD MARKED A GROVE OF SAPLINGS. THE BAYING OF THE HOUNDS SOUNDS VERY CLOSE AS HE SPRINGS INTO THE TREES!
SWIFTLY HE CLIMBS A SLENDER TRUNK, KEEPING TO THE SIDE HE WISHES IT TO BEND.. FROM TREE TO TREE HE SWAYS...
.....THE HOUNDS GO YELPING BY, COME TO THE PLACE HE LEFT THE HARE AND FORM A SNARLING, FIGHTING MASS OVER THE CARCASS.
THE SOLDIERS COME PANTING UP. "CALL OFF THE DOGS!" ORDERS THE LEADER. "THEY WERE ONLY CHASING SOME HUNTER; HE WAS LUCKY TO ESCAPE THEM."
HAL FOSTER
"WITH A HIDDEN SENTRY ON WATCH, A ROAD WITH DEADLY TRAPS AND DOGS ON GUARD, OUR WORK IS GOING TO BE DIFFICULT."
